Four students were elected yesterday to act as presidents of their respective classes. The election was a distinct honor, and more so because such a large number of votes were

The duties of those four students do not expire with the day of the election. There is work to do new.

Make your position something rather than that of mere honor or a further means to popularity. In the last few years, presidency of a class has meant mere honor. It has indicated that someone was more fortunate than someone else.

Newly elected officers have a broad field to work in. There is plenty of opportunity for them to show their ability. Why not make the position of a class president one will be held Wednesday, Oct. 10, at of real value to the class?
