NEBRASKA WINS.

After being considered the winners two months before the kickoff, Notre Dame, once called the wonder team, fell in the most decisive defeat of its career. The Cornhuskers, supported by a body of students keyed up to the highest pitch, smashed, tore, and passed to a clean-cut victory. The game was an upset, but it was a direct result of determination to give all and concede nothing.

For two weeks the students have been drilled into the gospel of fight and in that time they have expressed determination to expend their supreme efforts in whipping the highly praised invaders.

For those men who played Nebraska has a great measure of gratitude. Every man played a game that made the entire United States give this middle western school a glance that marked the University of Nebraska as a great institution. Nebraska's fine sportsmanship and Nebraska's fight against odds was nothing short of remarkable and it shall always be considered a potent factor.

When those hundreds of students attended the rally Friday night and when Captain Lewellen and Coach Dawson expressed their opinions of the game in no indirect manner, there seemed to be that declaration in the air that Nebraska was either to win or give Notre Dame the hardest battle of her career.

There are hard games ahead, however. Ames, on the schedule for next week, has a strong team that will cause trouble for the victorious Huskers. There must be no over-confidence. There must be that same determination and spirit to win. When the Thanksgiving game shall have been played and Nebraska shall have passed through every game with that grant-and-concede-nothing spirit, we may celebrate. In the meantime, fight, students, fight.

A HALL OF FAME.

Has it ever occurred to Nebraskans that there is no hall of fame for professors, deans and friends of the University, to all of whom there is a debt that can never be paid by a commercial medium. There are men who lived, who gave their lives to Nebraska, and who died, to be forgotten as generations of students were graduated.

Dean Bessey, after whom the building on the campus was named, was a man who left an impression after him in the name of his students. Alumni coming back in the spring, are forced to resurrect his name because students have forgotten it. Another man who should receive recognition is Professor D. W. Brace. At one time, one of America's greatest physicists, he conducted his experiments in the basement of Nebraska hall. Later the laboratories were built and Professor Brace died before he had an opportunity to display his real ability and genius.

In athletics there have been many men who have helped place the institution before the eyes of others. Jack Best, Guy Chamberlain, Rutherford and Rhodes will be forgotten if Nebraska does not include them in a hall of recognition. Other men are playing football today, some of them could easily receive berths on the best teams in America, yet, ten years from now their names will be but topics for us, alumni, to discuss.

Strangers coming to Nebraska many years hence will probably ask students about the men who helped make Nebraska a great University, and of course, the students will have to confess ignorance. A man went to Champ Clark's home town in Missouri a short time ago and asked where the grave of that great leader was to be found. No one knew except an old negro. Georgians began to think about the bones of Oglethorpe a short time ago and tried to locate them. They were thought to be in England, but the English sentiment would not give them up.

RAG CARPET

Contributions Are Invited

He—"You know I only live to make you happy."
She—"Dear me, you ought not to go to all that trouble."

The cripple confronted his lawyer: "Heavens man your bill is outrageous. You are taking four-fifths of the damage."

Lawyer—"I furnished the skill and the necessary legal learning for your case."

Victim—"Yes, but I furnished the case itself."

Lawyer—"Bosh, anybody could fall down a coal hole."

The Rag Doll reports that she saw three men yesterday who were still wearing the red buttons that they received in the student athletic ticket drive. They evidently still believe that they are in danger of being stopped every few feet by a zealous campaign committee. If nerve was all that was needed to make an aviator, we know some birds who would surely fly high.

The Rag Doll says that a good many of us would probably make better grades if we stayed away from class entirely.

We did feel cheap when the young onion said it wouldn't give a cent for us.

"You make me tired," said the Ford to its owner.

The Rag Doll says that the green cap controversy does more than the green caps. It at least covers both sides.

Nebraskans will find that the outside world will take their honored memories, and even their honored dead, if they themselves do not assume the initiative. They are men whom Nebraska cannot forget and a hall of fame would present their names to the successive generations of students. That we haven't a hall of fame seems to be merely neglect.

Student Opinion.

Contributions to this column are very welcome and invited. Student opinion is valuable to the editorial staff of the paper, consequently we welcome it.

To the Freshman Class:

I have been withholding an answer to J. T. M.'s reply to the arguments contained in my letter to the Chancellor, with the idea that there might be a few like J. T. M. who failed to see any aristocracy in the dictation of the Iron Sphinx. However, the matter seems to be settled now, and I am taking the liberty of answering all arguments in favor of Iron Sphinx methods.

In answer to J. T. M. I would like to say that I, too, am proud of the fact that I am a freshman in the University of Nebraska. I am not by any means ashamed of it. I am so proud of the fact that I bitterly resent all attempts at dictation on the part of the upperclassmen. I believe that we are just as intelligent, just as sane, and just as true men and women as there are in any other class.

The other point brought out by J. T. M. is that the wearing of a green cap is a custom and that customs have always played an important part in the lives of all peoples. This most assuredly is true. I would not for one moment deny it, but J. T. M. does not stop to consider that there are both good and bad traditions and customs. If he will review his history he will find that many customs have sprung up that were entirely detrimental to the public welfare.

It was not long ago that was a custom to hold our fellow men as slaves. Not quite so far back, some people customarily made beasts of themselves every Saturday night through an over-indulgence in liquor. And it used to be our custom to withhold from women the right to vote. We customarily denied her the right to hold property in her own name after she became married. After she married, her whole personality was submerged in that of her husband.

These are a few customs that have cost us many dollars and endless strife to be rid of. In view of the fact then, that there are bad customs as well as good customs, is it not better to examine each very carefully before determining whether you will follow it?

In regard to P. H.'s reply to "A Passerby," I do not have much say. It seems from his argument that he has just arrived from Russia and knows very little about American culture. It seems almost incredible that he is a University student, but the Editor assures me that he is not.

only a University student, but that he is also an upperclassman. He has the type of school spirit which tells him something like this, "I am a University of Nebraska man, and therefore I may violate the laws of the state of Nebraska at my pleasure. I am an upperclassman therefore, give me a barrel stave and I will enjoy myself at the expense of the underclassmen." He is so thoroughly saturated with this creed that no reasonable argument would have any other effect upon him than to cause him to become insanely angry.

Fellow freshmen, I was wrong in my attack upon this institution, but I had come into contact with a few men like P. H. and I was judging the entire University by them. I am very sorry that I judged so hastily and if this falls into the hands of any prospective University students I want to assure them that Nebraska is a wonderful school. Every one here is working for a common cause, "The advancement of the University of Nebraska." The student body is so thoroughly imbued with this idea that they take every opportunity of expressing their loyalty. Right now our main object is to beat Notre Dame and we really believe that we can do it. Our spirit is such that we even break out in class singing the Cornhusker. This is the real University spirit and it recognizes no classes. Each man is the equal of every other man.

Now you possibly wonder at my radical change of opinion. The Student Council met Tuesday evening and officially took away all the power of the Iron Sphinx to enforce the green cap tradition. The whole matter is placed under the jurisdiction of a representative body, the Student Council, and while I do not approve of the slight powers exercised by representatives of the lower classmen, the Student Council is quite an improvement over that association of rejuvenated cave-men, the Iron Sphinx. The Student Council does not approve of force of any kind and advocates the use of persuasion in perpetuating the green cap tradition. This attitude eliminates all of my main objection to the tradition and I intend to wear a green cap just as soon as I can obtain one and I would suggest that other Freshmen who have no more objection to the green cap than I, do the same.

BERNARD V. TIBBELS.
