OFFICE HOURS

Every afternoon with the exception of Friday and Sunday.

Now that the frigid weather has come down upon us with piercing coldness, we are reminded that the University campus was laid out wrong. The school is so located that the students have to walk either north or west to come to school, thus exposing them to the extreme blasts of the winds originating in those directions. While walking against a cold, piercing wind on the way to school is anything but pleasant, this situation has its advantage. It is a comfortable feeling to have the wind at one's back on the way home from classes.

The charge has been made that students in American colleges do not get enough exercise, and long walks are recommended. With this assertion in mind, a Lincoln church has asked students to take a Sunday morning walk to their church for the morning services. This suggestion should be taken seriously by students for the benefits of church attendance as suggested are many.

The exercise of walking to church will help the student to keep in the best of physical condition. But the attendance of church may also be urged on other and more important grounds. No student is so busy that he can't devote one hour a week to going to church. The college student who thinks that going to church is a waste of time is on the wrong track. Religion is the most powerful individual force affecting the world today.

Again, the church offers the student an opportunity to keep in contact with the outside world. Other advantages of regular church attendance might also be listed here, but these will suffice. Students might remember the saying of one of America's great men, which read as follows: "Religion is a dominant factor in a successful life."

In college one is often called upon to shake hands, either on receiving an introduction, welcoming an old acquaintance, or some such occasion. This constant practice naturally brings up the question, "How do you shake hands?" Do you take hold of a person's hand as though you were handling a hot potato and afraid of hurting yourself? Or do you take hold of a person's hand with a firm, manly grip, showing the heartiness and strength of the handclasp that you are really glad to make or renew the acquaintance? In this day of hustle and bustle when first impressions count so much, the value of a real he-man handshake cannot be over-estimated.

University traditions sometimes change. Ten and fifteen years ago it was the custom of graduating classes to present the University with a gift of some sort, and many interesting possessions of our campus have been provided by class gift. It was a splendid tradition—one for the University to be proud of.

In the past five years or so, however, a new tradition, if it can be so classified, has been adopted by the senior classes. Instead of the graduating class buying a gift for the University, they have reversed the tradition. Now no self-respecting senior class graduates from the University without leaving a class debt behind them for the school to remember them by. This year, however, an effort has been planned whereby the senior class will leave no debt as a legacy to the university. It is to be hoped that the senior class is successful in breaking "debt tradition."

RAG CARPET

Prof.—Some of the lower animals never sit down and think. Why? Studé—Some of them can't sit down.

The Rag Doll says that when the Purity League member recovered he probably was not eligible to march in the parade.

THESE ARE THE DAYS!
To send your overcoat to the cleaners.
To make all necessary repairs in the furnace.
To practice aesthetic dancing on the campus.

Many humorists make a funny sort of a living.

Many students who would hesitate to consume their soup aloud are not beyond reproach in the matter of class room etiquette.

A professor, it may be imagined, would just as soon have one wiggle five fingers at him derisively, as he would try to lecture to a class that whispered, giggled, or looked in desperation out the windows.

Have you ever tried to talk, or tell a story, to someone who paid no attention to you? It's a peculiar feeling. If you haven't, do so, for it will give you some idea of what a professor confronts when he lectures to a class of pre-occupied students. Look your instructor in the eye, then think about anything you please.

Again, how disconcerting to a professor is the hurly, burly when the first bell rings! There is a mad rush for caps and hats, a gathering up of coats and books, and often the professor's voice is drowned out in the hubbub. That bell is a gentle reminder that the class session is about over, not a warning that the building is on fire.

We admit, of course, that professors who just begin to get warmed up with the first bell are not so scarce as dod birds, but at least they are responsive and tactful if treated kindly. Give your instructor an opportunity to finish the sentence, and conclude his lecture. It's only common courtesy.

On the other hand, the professors who disregard the warning bell entirely should have their attention called to the fact that they should not wait to the second bell before concluding their lecture. Many students have to go to other buildings for their next class. If the professors will finish their lecture as soon as possible after the bell, they will find the students willing to co-operate with them in the matter of holding a few seconds "overtime."

—are you sure you deserve it?
"Give me a log with Mark Hopkins at one end of it and myself at the other," said, in effect, President Garfield, "and I would not want a better college."
But if Mark Hopkins was an inspired teacher, it is just as true that James A. Garfield was an inspiring student.
Sometimes Garfield's praise of his professor is quoted in disparagement of present day faculties—the assumption being that we as listeners are sympathetic, all that we ought to be—and that it is the teacher who has lost his vision.
Is this often the case?
It is the recollection of one graduate at least that he did not give his professors a chance. Cold to their enthusiasms, he was prone to regard those men more in the light of animated text-books than as human beings able and eager to expound their art or to go beyond it into the realm of his own personal problems.
This is a man to man proposition. Each has to go half way. Remember, there are two ends to the log.
