

SHOULD ENVY WILSON AND UNKNOWN SOLDIER

Covenant Is Read.
The scene of the conference when the league of nations covenant was first read to the delegates and first given to the delegates and first given to the world, was described by the speaker. Mr. Wilson, said he, had built up through a series of policy determining speeches a new code of ethics. He had raised the attitude of this country to a higher plane. We were in the war to serve, and not to gain. Our dealings at the conference bore out these statements of purpose. Then Mr. Wilson suggested organization in order that the late war should be a war to end war and so that the established plane of dealings should continue. At length the committee report was prepared and Mr. Wilson, as chairman, read the plan for organization.

"At the conclusion of that reading there was a complete silence for a half minute after Mr. Wilson finished—a silence more eloquent than the most laudatory burst of applause could have been," Mr. Holt said.

Memorable Armistice.
"I thought that there was no sign of hope on the horizon until Armistice day two years ago," continued the speaker. It was then that this country buried our unknown soldier. Two ceremonies took place that day which left an everlasting mark on Mr. Holt's memory.

The burial of the dead soldier with the officials who marched behind the body riding in state from the capitol to the Arlington cemetery, the address by the president himself, the quartet from the Metropolitan opera, the Marine band and all the instrumentalities of the most impressive funeral ever held in this country, were next described.

In contrast was the ceremony of the afternoon, resulting from seven women telling the reporters that they intended to pay their respects that afternoon to the commander-in-chief of the dead soldier, inviting anyone who desired to go with them.

Attempts to Speak.
Mr. Holt found nearly 15,000 people jamming the street in front of the Wilson home when he arrived. He described the scene that followed, the applause of the crowd, the president's appearance supported by his wife and a negro servant, his attempt to speak, and his return to the house too weak to say but a few words.

The crowd stayed on, and it is reported that at 7:30 that evening there were still several hundred persons LOST in Library, a gold open-faced watch with Nebraska fob attached. Reward. Call Kirk Linn at B1506.

standing in the street, looking at the house. "The contrast between the ceremony of the morning and the spontaneous gathering of the afternoon was great," said Mr. Holt, "but they were the same in my mind, the tribute to the boy who died to win a war and then to the man who later died to win a peace."

Service Is Strong Factor in Success
—Miss Vera Mills

Miss Vera Mills of the Rudge and Guenzel mail order department spoke to the Girls Commercial club Wednesday evening. The keynote of the address was the stressing of service to employers, to co-workers, and to customers as the big factor in success.

Miss Mills feels that little services count most towards success. Confidence is inspired by being on the job every minute; the employee who gives equal attention to large and small orders is helping to secure the confidence of all by courteous contact with customers.

Every girl, Miss Mills believes, should have a definite goal in her school work, and should hold to her specialty after she has determined it.

The report of the ticket sale for the Girls Commercial club dance, at the Lindell, Friday, February 22, was made at the same meeting.
