DR. FLING LECTURE ON HISTORICAL STUDY

dents here for a technical education. They are being taxed that students may get the larger view of life and that they may become leaders.

"The great men of history are not men who have looked upon the physical side of life, but those who have been spiritual leaders."

The broader conception of life, that all life is a spiritual thing, designates man from animal, Dr. Fling pointed out. "Until we realize that the economic side of life cannot be held above the spiritual, we cannot reorganize society so that men and women can live their lives effectively."

Says Nature is Reality.

"Nature is reality," he declared. "Natural sciences are those sciences that view a reality, drawing a conclusion that if a certain occurrence takes place under certain conditions, a certain result will follow."

"History views the entire body of men in society. It deals with life as a great, ever-changing drama, seen as a whole. It is not just dry facts and dates."

"History gives us the story of mankind, pointing out the great men of any time and the conditions under which they lived. It is interesting to note that the United States, with all its wealth and leisure time, has not produced a great writer, musician, artist or philosopher. Athens was extremely poor compared with this country, yet some of the greatest men of all time were Athenians.

"A study of history is essential if one would understand the affairs of today. If one would understand what is happening today, or what has happened in the last few hundred years, he must know what has occurred in the first six thousand years."
