BASKETBALL LETTERS.

There has been much spirited discussion in the Student Opinion column of the Daily Nebraskan over the awarding of basketball letters this year. A number of students expressed dissatisfaction that such a small number of letters were awarded and some seemed to think that three or four more letters should have been given.

The Committee on awards, which authorizes the issuance of letters, awarded six "N's" to basketball men, and this was done under a strict interpretation of the rules now in effect. The "N" club last fall worked a new plan of awarding letters in basketball, but this new proposed method was never officially acted upon by the Committee on Awards.

There has been no irregularity in the awarding of letters. The Committee on Awards gave every man a letter who earned one under the rules now in effect. That they are unduly strict is beside the point.

The committee authorized a revision of the rules last year, but the new plan has not been worked out. The "N" club is working on a new set of rules, and the committee has stated its willingness to make these retroactive to the beginning of the present year, and award letters to men who may have complied with the new rules, but who did not earn letters under the old regulation.

The athletic authorities have collected data from other representative universities, and this material will be made the basis of the new plan that will be worked out.

It has been found that some universities have rules that are more strict and rigid than those in effect at the University of Nebraska, and it has been found that some universities have rules that are more liberal. It is probable that the committee will work out a plan that will be a middle ground between the extremes.

The committee has adopted a very fair course in offering to make the new rules retroactive to the beginning of the year. Letters were awarded this year under a strict interpretation of the rules now in effect, and this had to be done. So if the new rules appease the disappointed ones, all well and good. And if they do not—it's just too bad.

NEW RULES FOR ISSUANCE OF LETTERS.

To the Editor:
Whereas there has been a certain amount of agitation by the students over rules under which recent awards were granted to the basketball players, it may be well to make the following statement:

The Committee on Awards followed to the letter the rules that governed the awards of letters last year. On the other hand, because the committee last year expressed dissatisfaction with the general looseness with which the rules were drawn up, authorized a revision of the rules.

This revision has not yet been completed but the committee is still working; and has expressed perfect willingness to make this retroactive to the beginning of the present year, and make awards in accordance with these rules, and grant additional "N's" should any individual player be able to attain them under the new rules.

The new rules will be arrived at only after a most searching analysis of the athletic constitutions of other representative Universities throughout the country. The committee has already secured a large number of these constitutions, and will make every effort to take care of the situation at once. In addition to these various suggestions submitted

WANTS TRADITIONS SUPPORTED
To the Editor:

These columns have been filled with some rather apparent insinuations, most of which are unfounded, that the Junior-Senior prom is a plan to allow the members of the committees to make some "easy" money.

The argument is one that appeals readily to the gossip loving but has thoughts to the fact that the dance is one of Nebraska's oldest traditions. We are short of traditions as it is. This is a young school and traditions are hard to build. Will anyone with the Nebraska spirit care to wipe out one of the old traditions.

Or does the pocketbook argument appeal to the writer in Wednesday's paper the most.

Let's loosen up and support old traditions.
