DEBATERS CLASH ON IMMIGRATION

and we are losing workers through emigration.

In his rebuttal speech, Mr. Peterson of South Dakota, argued that we need these middle class immigrants to make American standards of living.

Mr. Eyer argued that people of the middle-class lack permanency and intend to go back as soon as conditions are better in Europe. He showed that selection abroad would lead to international difficulties which would be dangerous at a time such as this when international diplomacy is at a critical stage.

Mr. Penfold asked Nebraska how they knew that present immigrants were not stable if none of them were going back now.

Future Industry Relies on Science
Mr. Walker replied that they are not going back now because of the extremely unfavorable conditions in Europe. Sending newly arrived immigrants to whatever part of the country they are needed as South Dakota proposes, would create federal control of the labor market and eventually lead to federal peonage, Mr. Walker said. It is machinery and science upon which reliance must be placed for the future development of American industry rather than immigrant labor, he continued.

Mr. Kramer of South Dakota pointed out that the plans advocated by the affirmative have never been seriously considered by congress and that the report of the commissioner-general of immigration indicates that immigrants who are now coming to this country intend to remain here permanently.

Wendell Berge concluded the debate with six minutes of smashing refutation that played havoc with South Dakota's arguments. He said that there was little possibility of a shortage of labor within the next five years since there is an over-supply at present. Prohibiting immigration for five years would not be postponing settlement of the immigration problem. He pointed out that South Dakota had not stated just how many immigrants would be selected to enter this country and that they had presented no definite, concrete plan for settling the question such as Nebraska advocated.

Open Forum Follows Debate.
Justice G. A. Day, presiding officer, threw the question open to general discussion following the rebuttal speeches and for more than half an hour the debaters were kept busy answering questions put to them by the audience. Some of the persons present asked questions which indicated considerable study of the immigration problem and forced the debaters, as Professor Fogg says, "to think on their hind legs."

A number of high school students who are debating the immigration question listened to the arguments and studied the work of the universities' representatives.
During the open forum discussion Professor Fogg extended an invitation to those present to listen in on the Iowa debate at the electrical engineering building with argumentation students and former debaters who will hold a radio party there tonight.
Before closing the debate, Justice Day complimented the members of the teams and said that in his opinion training such as this is one of the most valuable things that a university can give a man.

Clyde C. McDowell, '97, B.Sc. '05, has been awarded the prize from the Charles A. Coffin foundation for an unusual contribution to the efficiency or progress of the General Electric company. His contribution was a standard package for renewal parts, and is said to be a great aid in time-saving for the company.

Bird Club Begins Spring Meetings
The Bruner Bird club will hold its first meeting of the season at the University Museum at 8 o'clock Thursday evening. F. G. Collins, assistant curator, will talk on "What the Museum has for the bird students and nature-lovers."

This club, named for Nebraska's well-known naturalist, Prof. Lawrence Bruner, was organized in 1917. The president is Leonard G. Worley, a student in the university and assistant in the zoology department.

Those who are interested in the study of birds or botany are invited to attend the bi-weekly meetings and programs and join the field trips which are taken every Saturday morning during the spring.
