ARE WE PACIFISTS?

The Chicago Tribune recently ran an editorial by Orr in which the colleges and universities of the country are accused of fostering pacifism which implies that the patriotism of the students is suffering from the application of such doctrines.

What will be next? Where does such a broad and all-inclusive accusation touch the methods of instruction that are used here at the University of Nebraska?

Of course our viewpoint is more or less narrow and restricted and we are not informed, except in a general way, as to the methods that are used at other universities, but how the teaching methods that are used at present could in any way lessen the patriotism of the students is quite beyond us.

A very small percentage of the courses that are offered touch on peace or war, or kindred subjects, but from the experience that the writer has had with these, pacifism does not enter in to any great extent.

Undoubtedly the sentiment of the majority of students is in favor of peace and it is very probable that a referendum on the subject would be almost unanimous in favor of abolishing wars, if possible. And it is also probable that such a referendum among voters would yield almost the same result. So where is the sin of pacifism?

Citizens of the United States are probably the most peace-loving in the world. This is demonstrated by the reluctant manner in which the country entered the recent war and the hesitance of the country towards the proposal that it enter the League of Nations. The reason the United States did not enter the League of Nations was probably based more on a desire for peace than any desire to hold our government aloof from the others.

The doctrine of pacifism is entirely different from that of "peace at any price." Can not a pacifist be just as patriotic as any one else? Wherein lies the sin?

THE COST OF EDUCATION.

An average annual cost of $889.66 for students in medical colleges at Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Michigan, Nebraska, Syracuse, the medical college of Virginia, and the University of Virginia, is shown in a recent published study made by Dean Irving S. Cutter, '98, of the Nebraska college of medicine.

The dean's figures show that the bulk of the students' expenses are board, medical fees, lodging, clothing, and recreation, in the order named.

The junior year is the most expensive, except at Virginia where the sophomore year and at Indiana where the freshman year costs the student the most. Nebraska, with an average expenditure for the student of $871.04, comes sixth in this list of eight schools.

According to Dean Cutter, the figures returned show that students can spend much less than they regard as essential. The number of students earning part of their expenses is large, he adds. The average expenditure represents in the dean's opinion the expenses of the student who gets the most out of college—professional, cultural, and social.

These figures from the most expensive of all colleges are extremely interesting, particularly so since they show what has long been known that expenses at Nebraska are lower than at most other institutions. A similar comparison in other colleges would be interesting.

It is very probable that the average cost for students in other colleges would run several hundred dollars below Dean Cutter's figures, probably reaching into the five or six hundreds. But, there as in the medical college, the cost for students would without Student Opinion.

POOR AND RICH STUDENTS.

To the Editor:
Are students of rich parents better fit for a college education than those of poor parents? Dean Nile of the Cornell University medical college advises that training for the medical profession should be restricted to boys of rich parents. He says that the poor boy breaks down in supporting himself while acquiring an education.

If only the students of rich parents were allowed educational privileges we would sacrifice some of our best talent. The fact that a student is willing to put himself through school proves that he is ambitious and progressive. It is this type of scholar that has the qualities that will do society more good. He will make his education prove worth while and will be able to use it in furthering the aim of society.

President Burton of the University of Michigan takes the opposite position from that of Dean Nile. He argues that many of the college faults are due to large wealth and social tinsel. Many of the students come to the University for the social life instead of an education. If a student earns his way through college he is more likely to realize his purpose at school.

The child of rich parents may have the advantage over the child of the poor parent, but it does not follow that he is more capable of obtaining an education. History has proved that success of the student is largely a matter of his own will power and initiative. Wealth and poverty may have their influence but the final results are largely an individual matter.

THE YES-ERS.

(Penn State Collegian.)
Here at Penn State is a student body that is composed of most agreeable fellows. In fact, it would be hard to find a more pleasant group of men with whom to pass four years of college life than is found right in the Nittany Valley.

Agreeableness is a virtue, but carried to excess it becomes a vice.

This cap stays put!

Other caps get lost but the new Williams Hinge-Cap stays where you want it. Truly, that's an improvement.

Like the cap, the shaving cream in the Williams tube is a big improvement, too. For Williams lather is heavier and faster-working. It holds the water in, so that your beard is softened sooner. And the lather lubricates. The razor fairly glides over your skin! Because of a soothing ingredient in Williams you can shave daily yet always have a smooth and well-cared-for face. Williams is pure, natural-white cream. Absolutely without coloring matter. Buy it, try it—with the new Hinge-Cap!
