STUDENT OPINION

As a remedy of this condition, would it not be well to change the basis of representation? For the consideration of the board, I suggest that in the future the fundamental basis of election be the group and not the class to which the girls belong.

D. K. T.

THE GREAT CAMPUS DISCUSSION.

To the Editor:

As for expressing appreciation, really don't you think actions speak louder than words, and that this "conferring a favor" idea should be checked?

There are clever girls and dumb ones, giggling girls and smiling ones, appreciative and unappreciative, line-handers and serious ones; and you will find all kinds both in sororities and out of them. It is true, though, that frat men have a tendency to limit their circle of dates to sorority girls. It is so easy to follow the beaten path, and call a sorority. There is something distasteful about inviting a "barb" to the house. Are men slaves to convention, lacking the courage to do their own thinking and to act upon their own ideas?

I can't feel a great deal of sympathy for fellows who, alone sometime in a moment of reflection, bemoan the abundance of "liners." It's the men's fault; they demand that type. If they really want to find girls who can be real pals, why don't they look for them? They can't be too bashful. It must be they are too lazy. It is so much easier to be vamped into something by someone who bubbles over when she sees you and chatters endlessly until you ask her for a date in order to get away without being abrupt. But they can't help it. Of course not, they rather like being monopolized—it's flattering.

Poor disillusioned men. Are you too weak to start a conversation when you happen to see one of your classmates? That is, I mean, if she is at all attractive. Study people. It's interesting. Talk to everyone, and after a while you'll find that many people, whom you had before merely recognized, are really quite interesting, in fact, keen when you come to think about it. Learn to distinguish gold from brass. Be friendly. That's what this old world needs.

INDEPENDENTS WON'T "SECOND FIDDLE."

To the Editor:

I read the letter of "A Fraternity Man" and also the answers from the sorority girls but I think the independent girl has a comeback too. A high compliment you paid me, "M. F." Yes, indeed—"A girl who appreciates the time and money spent on her."

I was told before I came here that a girl had to "fall all over a man's neck in order to keep him" here. It appears so. But as far as I know the Independent women aren't going to, any more than the sorority women. We aren't so dumb as you think. Yes, and another one: "Do not date these dumb sorority girls, let them sit at home and date the Independent girls who appreciate it." You might as well have said it in that many words—it would have saved time. Date the Independents, until when? Until the sorority girls "come around"—then drop them? No, thank you. We have more sense. I'm afraid you'd find yourselves being refused if you tried it. Am I not right, girls?

As for old fashioned girls. Good heavens! Why should we be old fashioned girls if there are no gallants to go with us. The other day I opened the north door of Social Science and as I held it, four men walked out and two walked in. The four were fraternity men.

And as for walking to dances. Do you realize that when a girl goes to a dance she has on thin slippers, generally high-heeled? How can you want her to walk ten or fifteen blocks, then when she is tired, walk home? And you'd not take her again if she wore walking shoes—you'd dub her a "rotten dancer." As for riding on a street car. I never had a man suggest it to me so it's not my fault if we don't. It's his.

Independent girls—don't be substitutes for the sorority girls. That isn't what you're here for. You aren't dumb. The men are just conceited.

Sorority Rushing Under Question

Plans for simpler rushing by sororities in the fall were discussed at the regular Pan-Hellenic meeting Wednesday afternoon in University hall. Dean Amanda Heppner spoke on the raising of scholarship in sororities, and the part of the sorority girl in activities. "Girls should not be forced into activities for honor to the sorority, but rather to develop the girl's own personal character," she said.

Sisters Plan Installation

A picnic and installation meeting is being planned by the Big Sisters organization for the near future for initiation of new members.

The Big Sisters on the Seniors Advisory board elected the new members for next year at a series of meetings held during the past two weeks from the entire list of girls registered in the University. The new members were chosen with a view to their participation in student activities, their dependability, and their Cornhusker spirit.
