Tonight
Dear Mother
I guess I can't help from doing everything father says don't about I make him so awful cross at you goodby
Am taking my wooden gun with me cause maybe I won't be back for a year or ever goodby Am leaving you my wooden top as
I'll remember me mother
& love you
Sincerely yours truly
Billy

Seventeen Students Contribute to Volume of Nebraska Verse

Seventeen students contributed to Nebraska's first book of student verse which is on sale at Lincoln bookstores and the Regents campus bookstore.

The poem winning the first prize of $50 offered by alumni of the class of '98, was written by Janet Pressley, a graduate student. It follows:

APOCALYPSE.

I dare not be too long alone
Lest I awake and find me gone;
Lest there come thunder in my ears,
The rush of wings, the clash of spears,

The riving of timber, and in my eyes,
The stinging smoke of Paradise;
Lest heaviness should halt my blood
In its swift course, a seething flood

Of molten lava, burning wine
Possess this body I call mine,

Rush hotly through my finger-tips,
Strike leaping flames from my parched lips,

Filling my veins with such a fire
As Sidon knew or ravaged Tyre.

Under my breast my heart might grow
Too hot and high to be held so.

My sentient self might rise and say,
"I am very strong; I will not stay.

I am not you nor any woman;
I am not God, I am not human.

It is no task to tear apart
The puny prison of your heart.

I dare not be too long alone
Lest I awake and find me gone."

The poem which took second prize a $25 offered by the Vestals of the Lamp, honorary organization for women of the College of Arts and Sciences, was written by Helen Rummons. It is:

TO ONE UNKNOWN.

Time has set our trysting place,
And Love has marked the day;
I know not if it be tonight,
Or many years away.
Sometimes I hate the many days
That lie between us two,
Sometimes I bless the surging years
That bear me on to you.

Both these women are members of Chi Delta Phi, women's honorary literary sorority.

Of the forty-seven poems in the book the majority are rhymed and metrical. Over a third, however, are free verse. Only some half-dozen men contributed to the volume, by far the greater part of the work having been written by women.

Among the students who have several poems in the book are Mildred Burcham, Ione Gardner, Janet Pressley, Emily Ross, and Helen Rummons. Miss Gardner's contributions are all free verse, while Miss Ross works entirely in the rhymed pattern. Miss Burcham and Miss Pressley have written most of their poems in metrical and rhymed form, while Miss Rummons is divided about equally between the two forms.

Other students who have contributed to the volume are Margaret Cannell, Mariana Cummings, Audrey Diller, Henry Eller, Wilbur Gaffney, Catherine LaMaster, Marie Mengers, Jere Mickel, Esther Swanson, Verna Trine, Mary Ure, and John Virtue.

The poems, except for the two prize-winning compositions, are arranged alphabetically by authors.
