TWENTY-FIVE HUNDRED ATTEND FRESHMAN INITIATION

freshmen to act in harmony with the ideals of the institution, to be good citizens of the University commonwealth, to conform to its traditions.

"You can be a good citizen first of all by doing your work well. Efficiency is the first requisite. Your doing well in your studies is your first concern, not merely because the acquiring of certain grades is a necessary prerequisite to your abiding with us, but because of the value of knowledge acquired," he declared.

The Chancellor then went on to explain how even some of the subjects not immediately connected with life would be of great value to them in their future careers. He urged them further to be well rounded citizens of the University community, to take an interest in all good things—student activities, athletics, and sports.

In concluding he said, "The University is a microcosm. It endeavors to represent the best intellectual life, thought and activity of the human race at its present stage of development."

Dr. G. E. Condra, founder of freshman initiation, stressed the amount of responsibility resting on incoming freshmen—responsibility in student activities, in scholarship, in loyalty to the University, in any business connected with the University. He expressed his belief in the strength of numbers of the freshman class, in the varied material of which it is made, and in the talents that will be unfolded during their years in residence.

Scott Speaks.

Prof. R. D. Scott, in charge of instruction in freshman English, discussed "University Scholarship." He found, he related, that in the east the University of Nebraska is known because of its wonderful football team. He was unable to hear this alone about the University, without vexation, but especially in Boston it made him angry. Soon he began to tell the easterners that Nebraska has one of the best botany departments in the United States. He told every graduate of Harvard University he met that it was Nebraska that furnished Harvard with the Dean of its Law School—Roscoe Pound, former Dean of the College of Law at Nebraska. Professor Scott emphasized the fact that Nebraska is one of the ten scholastically leading Universities in the country, and that it is the task of the freshmen to maintain the standard that the alumni and present students have set.

Miss Amanda Heppner, dean of women, urged the girls entering the University for the first time to enter activities. "Girls are backward," she stated, "in entering activities. They lack the aggressiveness of boys. For that reason many of them, although as able as boys, do not progress to hold leading positions upon publications and in other activities as often as do the young men. Girls can do as much for the University in various activities as do the men on the gridiron if they will devote themselves to the worthwhile activities in school."

Urges Preparation.

Carl C. Engberg, dean of men, urged new students to school themselves to prepare the assigned work in any course they might take, even though they might think it of no use. "I felt when I was a student," he said, "that many subjects were of no practical use." But now, after mastering his desire to not do his best work at all times, he realizes of what great value they are.

He pointed out that personal acquaintance with the instructor is often impossible in such a large institution, but that every instructor would like to be in personal touch with every student in his classes. He urged all students to come to him at any time in regard to the course they should take, or for advice on any other matter in which he might be of service.

Miss Kathryn Warner, '25, of Dakota City, president of Mortarboard, urged the girls to enter all the activities that they have time for, to work in them not only for the repayment they will get, but just for the pleasure of being of service.

Coach Fred "Snap-It-Up" Dawson, director of athletics, imparted to the freshmen an idea of "Cornhusker Spirit."

"Cornhusker spirit does not include athletics alone," he declared. "It is based on loyalty to the University of Nebraska, and it is known because of the spirit of real sportsmanship that prevails."

"Our athletes have as fine a record for scholastic standing as any in the world. We win our games by straight football. The games are played in a fair and square manner. We have no muckers on the squad."

Must Furnish Impetus.

"It will be necessary for you to furnish the impetus that must lie behind every football team to make it a winner. Your loyalty must never be lax. You must cheer when the game is close, but most of all you must cheer if the team is fighting to keep from losing. It needs your support then more than at any other time. Nebraska spirit has always been one of the greatest factors in football, and you must continue to make it so."

Following Mr. Dawson's address, the entire class rose and took the "Nebraska Oath," administered by Wendell Berge, chairman. It is as follows:

"I promise that I will work strenuously to maintain the highest standards of University scholarship, realizing that I am here primarily to study and learn."

"I swear that I will earnestly strive while in the University to develop all the abilities that I can so that when I leave I will be a better citizen of the United States than I am now.

"I pledge myself to support loyally each and every project which I believe is for the good of the University, with all the might I possess."

"I swear that I will earnestly strive to Twelfth Street, east of the Social fair-playing Cornhusker; that I will strive to maintain Nebraska as one of the greatest Universities in the land; and, that I will love and honor the Scarlet and Cream."

Following the singing of the Cornhusker, the Class of 1928 adjourned to Twelfth Street, east of the Social Science Building, where still and moving pictures were taken of the entire class.
