CAMPUS DRIVES.

A practical suggestion is made by the Women's Pan-Hellenic association for better regulation of sales campaigns on the campus. The Student Council might even go farther than is suggested and prohibit actual solicitation. The most important of such campaigns for funds—student athletics ticket sales and payment of stadium pledges—are carried on through booths.

STANDARDIZATION.

The statement "this is the age of 'specialization'" is made frequently and proof of it is convincing. This specialization enables modern society to produce the vast number of extras which it considers essential to its greatest happiness. And it leads to the standardization of clothing, food, houses and so on.

AT INDIANA.

The latest investigation of whether students should use automobiles is being made at the University of Indiana. The faculty recommendation to the board of trustees was much milder than expected.

Ten Years Ago

The first All-University party committee was appointed to co-operate with the faculty on student organizations for the purpose of formulating a social event for all students of the University.

Twenty Years Ago

Work was started on the "Sombrero," annual publication of the junior class.

BOSS DAD

Whenever we Americans would honor something, we name a day or a week after it. We have Management Week, Safety Week, and all the other weeks. We have Mothers' Day, and Dad's Day, and all the other days.

TO CHEER OR NOT

In an editorial which appeared in the Columbia Missourian, a psychology professor was quoted as saying that crowds had a great deal to do with athletic successes. In an editorial in the Big Ten Weekly it was said that cheering had nothing at all to do with winning football games, and that athletes on the field were unconscious of the cheering.

Here are two sides of this much discussed subject. We incline toward the latter view, with certain exceptions. We believe that cheering at football games is mostly wasted on the players except before the game, between the halves, and when some player is being helped from the field.

At the same time we think that if there were no cheering at games, players would be the first to notice it. As it was pointed out to us yesterday by a keen observer, "It is not the noise, but the lack of it that is noticeable."

It is true that teams play better on the gridiron when facing a foe than they do on the practice field. Whether this is due to the tension aroused by the coming combat, or whether it is caused by the coach's whipping lectures, or whether it is due to the cheering of the crowd is not for us to say.

But the thing is that the Big Ten Weekly pricks the bubble that has blown around ever since cheer leaders were created, that it was yelling as well as playing that won games. We have our private belief that there is a psychological worth in yelling at rallies, if the yelling is coupled with the proper comments by the coach, but we hold that concerted yelling at games, during plays, is almost so much wasted effort.—Ohio State Lantern.

SWEZEY GIVES LECTURE ON "SUN, STARS, PLANETS"

certain conical-shaped phenomena which act on the same principal as tornadoes.

"It is evident," he said, "that the sun would soon die out if it did not have some way of obtaining additional heat. These 'tornadoes' suck up the hot vapors from the interior and great geyser-like eruptions are shot thousands of miles into space, producing the heat and light of which we are aware."

Told of Stars. Professor Swezey also dealt with the stars. Stars are suns, he explained, and the reason their heat is not felt is because they are millions of miles away, while the sun is only 93,000,000 miles distant.

Light from the nearest star requires four years to reach the earth, while that from the farthest known cluster reaches here 200,000 years after its departure.

The immense magnitude of the solar system, not readily appreciated by many, was made clear by a comparison to common things. "Suppose the sun to be one yard in diameter," said Professor Swezey, "and be placed in the southwest corner of the University campus. Then, in proportion, the earth would be about the size of a common garden pea, and would be in a position at about Fourteenth Street. The farthest planet, then would revolve in an orbit which would almost touch the Agricultural campus."

The main body of stars from a flat, circular cluster in the heavens. Sometimes they are seen when the cluster is in an edgewise position, other times from a different angle, so that more stars are visible at certain periods. Light travels around the earth in one-seventh of a second, declared the lecturer, and requires one and one-half seconds to reach the earth from the moon. From the sun, however, eight minutes is taken. Professor Swezey will continue his lecture next week in Social Science auditorium.
