POOR LIGHTING

“Electrical Lighting and Illumination” is the title of a course offered in the electrical division of the College of Engineering.

This deficiency of lighting has probably existed since the University first opened its doors.

But it is not in the engineering buildings only that lighting is poor. Although the tests have been almost entirely confined to them, and so no figures can be given for the other buildings, yet no particularly keen observation, or sensitiveness to intensity of light, is necessary to recall the feeble illumination in the Library where many students do most of their reading.

All of the old buildings, excepting the Electrical Engineering building, are poorly lighted, most of them even more poorly than the Library.

The chief objection to poor lighting is not mere inconvenience in reading; it is the harm resulting from eyestrain.

If the total of irreparable damage to eyesight of all students who have been graduated from the University, caused by four years of study in rooms with insufficient light, could be measured—in terms of money, for example—it would probably run into the millions.

An effort to keep power consumption for lights down to as low a figure as possible is the reason, evidently, for deficiency of lighting.

Those who are in charge of the physical plant of the University are aware of the inadequate provision for artificial illumination in most of the buildings.

Nebraska cannot expect a host of new buildings with the most modern of conveniences, but what the University has should be made the most of.

And here is an improvement that can be easily made without the help of the legislature.

Student Opinion IS AGAINST SUPPRESSION.

The student opinion column has been silent, but today it is alive—alive with a criticism of the Youth Movement—alive with a criticism of the books of Upton Sinclair and a denunciation of the socialistic tendency.

In youth is found the hope of tomorrow. If we who are attending universities at the present time are the ones who are this hope and if we are going to make this world of tomorrow, it is up to us to read such books as Mr. Gaffney objects to in order that we may know something about existing conditions.

cause people to think. After all, which are more valuable: those which contain nonsense and do not even approach the realm of literature, or those books which, even though the reader does not agree with the author's principle, cause the reader to think, to gain an interest in the social system and to look deeply into the matter of social welfare?

Mr. Gaffney hints at morality and mentions “free love.” It is needless to say much concerning free love; we can only point out the defects of our own moral system.

In the opinion of Mr. Gaffney we have no right to object to our social system. Is our social system so perfect that it cannot be improved? When you pass a prison, or even read about crime, does it ever occur what things may have caused it? It is not neutral for men to commit crime: for crime is a product of social conditions.

Victories in three games was the record of the Cornhusker basketball team on its northern trip. The third game of the series was with Shattuck where the final score was 44 to 22.

The four classes of the University met to discuss the adoption of the honor system. Great diversity of individual opinion prevailed in all the classes but the freshman.

In the meeting of the senior class, talks were given by several members of the faculty. After some consideration the class voted to put itself on record as being in favor of the honor system but expressing sentiment against the informing of one student upon another.

In the junior class there was also considerable discussion. Here the first question to be considered was whether the aim of the system was to punish or to reform.

caught cheating without giving him a hearing. In this class also the idea of encouraging one student to tell on another was severely attacked.

In the sophomore class the discussion lasted for two hours on the resolutions that had been previously adopted in the mass meeting. The discussion showed that all the students were in favor of a high standard of character.

In all classes a committee was appointed to confer with similar committees from other classes in order to draw up the final set of resolutions.

Ten Years Ago

The Cornhusker basketball team left for its annual journey south. Eight men were selected to make the trip, and as they started at 7 o'clock in the morning, very few students were on hand to give them a send-off.

The semi-annual cram sessions that “are said to be a necessary part of our educational system” had started in preparation for the final examinations which were to be held on Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of the coming week.

Under the title of University Bill Board, a series of semi-serious drawings of things that were occupying a prominent place in the life of the students each week was published. One picture showed a youthful prodigy, wearing a big badge lettered P. B. K., with one hand resting on a high pile of books, and having his picture taken for the Cornhusker.

WASHINGTON STATE COLLEGE—Honey beats alcohol in preventing radiators from freezing. At least such is the assertion of the specialist in apiculture here. The honey must be used in solution and the initial cost is not much more than alcohol and the solution will last all winter, for there is no evaporation.
