AN ATTACK ON MILITARY TRAINING.

To the current number of The Nation, Paul Blanshard, field secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy, has contributed an article entitled "Military 'Glory' in the Colleges" which is a rather striking analysis of the methods by which—Mr. Blanshard believes—university students are propagandized into taking military training. Throughout the entire article Mr. Blanshard draws illustrations from the University of Nebraska to illustrate the points he is making. This material was doubtless collected when he visited the campus in November.

It must be admitted that the facts presented are, for the most part, not to be questioned. His interpretation of the facts will, of course, be subjected to a merciless attack by those who believe that there is a moral obligation to make this training compulsory. In any event, the treatment given by Mr. Blanshard should be interesting to those who have convictions on either side of this question. He attempts to draw his conclusions from facts and not from prejudices and for that reason his argument cannot be ignored. Regardless of the fact that it may be unpleasant to many persons it possesses enough logic to demand refutation.

JOURNALISM STUDENTS HEAR ADDRESSES BY STATE EDITORS

exalted ideals will be carried to new frontiers of service and that within our own time your influence as our helpers or our contemporaries will be found raising newspaper standards to new planes that your better training will enable you to raise and occupy."

"I believe that country journalism never offered a better field for trained and talented young men and women than it does today," Mr. Alden stated. "The business of newspaper making has stepped up professionally, economically, and financially. It has been a field requiring the application of strong talent and exceptional business capacity. The mortality of a country weekly newspaper is not the sign of a declining business and profession but the doctrine of an advancing one which is demanding something beside the ability to utter one's thoughts as important as one may think them to be."

Mrs. Marie Weekes, editor of the Norfolk Press and president of the Nebraska Press Association, brought to the students an address, "Country Newspapering—A Woman's Opportunity for Service," abounding in idealism and enthusiasm.

Look to Young People.
"Bear in mind, my young friends of the School of Journalism of the University of Nebraska, that it is to you and to young men and women like you we older people are looking for those who will help us bring our newspaper to the pinnacles of our expectations and ideals, ethics, principles, standards, guidance, conduct, and prosperity," she stated. Adequate preparation in a broad range of subjects is a prerequisite to efficient service. This training, imposed upon a foundation of natural leadership and judicial temperament, produces successful journalism.

"We must give readers better things than they want because we want them to become better men and women than they are." For young women venturing into the country journalism field Mrs. Weekes held idealism and service to be high points. Small-town publishing operations impose upon editors ethical demands which, if completely met, define the harmonious relationship of members of the community. Mrs. Weekes pointed out how small-town papers could bring farm and town folk into mutual understanding by the creation of friendly sentiment.

Former Senator John S. Kroh of Ogallala, editor and publisher of the Keith County News, concluded the Tuesday afternoon program, speaking on "Nebraska Country-Newspaper Conditions." He praised the large number of newspapers that are stressing educational news, that "are giving freely of their columns and of their assistance to the publication of all matters beneficial to the great, broad, general subject of education, and particularly to their local high schools." "I wish to commend those papers," he said, "for it means that the press of Nebraska is making advancement in selling the schools to the taxpayers."
