THE IVY DAY ORATION

Mr. William Norton is to be congratulated on the fearless and critical note which he struck in his Ivy Day oration.

TO THE ALUMNI

"There is even danger that that fine institution, the University of Nebraska, may become a gigantic trade school."

So says Willa Cather, one of the most distinguished alumnae which our University has produced.

THANKS

Our great appreciation for the generous patronage of Cornhusker students this year will stimulate us to greater efforts to serve you better next year.

students see the crowd, which is always noisy and conspicuous, in its pursuit of athletics, activities, and social life, and they follow it.

There is a second group of students, however, who are more deserving of commiseration than censure.

The problem of dealing with these two classes of students is one which the University must face.

There has been a tendency on the part of some persons to judge the University by the size of its enrollment.

This attempt "to sell" an institution of higher learning in the same way in which you would sell the products of a shoe factory eventually will destroy the intellectual courage of the school.

As an educational institution, your Alma Mater is drifting in several directions.

cannot put them all in the noticeable physical features capable of making good moving pictures.

Student Opinion

The Daily Nebraskan assumes no responsibility for the sentiments expressed by correspondents.

To the Editor: Under the present system of managing student publications, we understand the staffs are elected by a Publication Board composed of five faculty members and three students.

Shortly after mid-semester, one of the news editors who was conducting a column, Olympian Stuff, had the temerity to state, in one of his habitual tirades against the University's atmosphere of intellectual smugness, that Nebraska had one of the poorest English faculties in the country.

Two weeks ago, after Sigma Delta Chi, his honorary professional journalistic fraternity, had elected the editor and business manager of Awgwan for next year, the Board demanded that the fraternity either give up its power of election, or cease publishing Awgwan.
