the defeat of the team.
 Victory in every game does not always picture a successful season. It is the spirit of the game, and the reflection on the followers that will stamp the success of any team.
 So the N Club, the men who year in and year out compete for Nebraska, winning and losing as chance allows it, have seen the need for an immediate discontinuance of the practice of wholesale betting on intercollegiate games. They have taken the initial steps toward stopping it, these men who are trying to uphold the honor of Nebraska. We as students have stood by them on the field of battle. Our task now is to stand by them as they battle this element of betting which has turned the game of football from a great sport to a great venture, with the money losers displaying as great a lack of sportsmanship as they displayed lack of judgment in the laying of their bets.

THE BETTING MENACE
 Not years ago in one of the Valley schools there was agitation for removal of the athletic director. There was an opinion among individuals that the teams of the school should win all of the games and disregard sportsmanship. The situation went so far that the athletic board of control called a meeting and talked over the situation with the coach. When given a chance to speak for himself the coach told that body of men that if they could find any complaint from any one of standing outside the bettors, he would resign. The investigation was carried on through and the matter dropped for they found that the coaches' statement was correct.
 At its monthly meeting, the N Club composed of Nebraska athletes, went on record as opposed to betting on intercollegiate contests. The members pledged themselves to make a determined effort to discourage the practice.
 This fall, as in other years, Nebraska has a good football team. Only the coach and the athlete know the impossibility of winning every contest on the schedule. Having felt the thrills of victory and the pangs of defeat more keenly than the crowd, they are able to know this. It is the athlete then, when a victim of the popular pastime of betting, who feels the oppression of the betting wolves who yearly howl at his heels and the heels of the coach following a defeat.
 Naturally enough, being the victim of the assault, they have investigated to find the source of the dissatisfaction. Always it points to the gambler. The big loser on the game is the man who laments most

the defeat of the team.
 So the N Club, the men who year in and year out compete for Nebraska, winning and losing as chance allows it, have seen the need for an immediate discontinuance of the practice of wholesale betting on intercollegiate games. They have taken the initial steps toward stopping it, these men who are trying to uphold the honor of Nebraska. We as students have stood by them on the field of battle. Our task now is to stand by them as they battle this element of betting which has turned the game of football from a great sport to a great venture, with the money losers displaying as great a lack of sportsmanship as they displayed lack of judgment in the laying of their bets.
