UNIVERSITY NIGHT

University Night will soon be with us. Those students and members of the faculty who are likely to be the target for satire are waiting anxiously for the day. They will see themselves lampooned, and, in all probability, they will enjoy it; for one seldom enjoys anything as greatly as when he is the central figure.

Some of the wit, perhaps, may be a bit biting; the satire a bit crude; but the skits will nevertheless be enjoyable, for there is seldom in them anything of malice.

Besides accomplishing its obvious end in swelling the bank account of the worthy Y. M. C. A., University Night offers an excellent opportunity for the relief of the notions that cannot be squelched-the desire to poke fun at somebody.

Furthermore, those who are lampooned are given an excellent opportunity to understand that, after all, they are not above lampooning. The room; but at University Night it is the student who rules. The student desire to puncture the dignity of his hold in awe.

Each probably represents an inthousand dollars. The three of them combined, with the aid of the others, might be able to put a good sized sum into an inter-denominational center that would serve as a muchneeded University Union.

It seems not only inconsistent with the idea on inter-denominational co-operation, but also rather extravagant to duplicate so extensively the plant of religious effort on the campus. The question might be raised as to whether the work of the student pastors is effective enough to warrant such an outlay of money, especially since they are not combining their efforts. The question might also be raised as to whether there is not a duplication of this Florsheim Shoes work with that of the Deans of Men and Women and of the "Y" organizations, so that the expenditure of so much money is unjustifiable.

SO FEW LINCOLNS

Lincoln's birthday called forth many flowery tributes from the nation's editors, but one of the most interesting bits of writing on the anniversary this year was published in the University of Colorado "Silver and Gold". The writer wonders what would happen if Lincoln should attempt to enter a modern university. His conclusions follow:

"If a long, lean, lanky, six-foot, erlloused-handed, awkward, green, country-looking, country-smelling fellow got off the train sometime in-September and knocked at the door of a modern university. "'Mr. ah-Abra-ah-oh, yes Lincoln your total is extremly low; you have no science, no language, not enough mathematics. We can't allow you to enter our institution, Mr. Blincolnsh-Lincoln. You might try some of our courses through the Extension Department.' He would never in a thousand worlds be rushed by a broad-minded enough to overlook and differences in opinion.

Imagine the fate of a student who might do such a thing on the Nebraska campus. It would be worse than that of a man calling for a coed about a month ago without a Rent-a-Ford.

There might have been more than one situation that might necessitate carrying an umbrella on a pleasant renting a Ford. But Nebraska students never seemed to realize them.
