America Must Develop A Philosophy To Become Great, Says Meiklejohn

Americans as a people are by mere external destiny fated to be great, but whether our career shall be a great achievement or a great catastrophe, depends upon our development of a philosophy, says Prof. Alexander Meiklejohn, of the University of Wisconsin philosophy department, in a brochure just published by the American Library Association.

"Nothing in human life," says Prof. Meiklejohn, "is more terrible than that a man or a group of men should have power which they do not know how to use, should be masters of a situation which they cannot comprehend, and today that terror is upon us who are Americans. I, for one am certain that America has not yet achieved a philosophy, but I am almost as sure that she has one in the making.

The geologist measures the time of the making of the world in millions of years, while the Bible describes the world as made in six days. But the "compromisers" hurdle this difficulty by saying: "If one is willing to regard a 'day' in the Bible as meaning the same as a 'million years' in the geologists' computations, then the contradiction practically disappears.

"But the trouble is, that under such treatment, not only the difference of opinion but also the opinions themselves seem to disappear. If words can thus transfer their meanings—if a day can mean a million years—then God may be the devil, and atheism may mean that the moon is made of green cheese. The essential defect in this method is that those who are trying to 'get together' are still, at heart, enemies.

To illustrate his view of American philosophy, Prof. Meiklejohn attempts a definition in relation to the fight about evolution and religious warfare, "a current discussion which has in it possibility for great good and for ill."

That controversy, he believes, may also serve as the occasion for the taking of the next step in the development of intelligence as a people. He says that when men are spiritually alive they are never free from just such controversies, whether the issue be slavery or wages, or the damnation of infants, but, he asks, what hope may we have of right dealing with them?

Then he follows with the contrast between the critical reflection of the philosopher, and "the common way of dealing with controversies—the way of warfare, the way of voting, and the way of compromise, which by themselves seem to me to lead to failure and confusion.

"These three differ from each other but they are alike in one essential respect—they attempt to settle a controversy without understanding it. And, alike they can reap the utility which is the proper fruit of their procedure.

"If an opinion is forced by fighting, more fighting soon will be needed; if an opinion is enforced by voting, men will soon be voting to determine what it was they voted about; if an issue is decided by compromise, more compromise soon will be demanded and each in turn will be found ineffectual."

Pointing out further the weaknesses of fighting and voting as methods of searching out the truth, Prof. Meiklejohn says that a contrast with settlement by compromise, most clearly reveals the value of philosophy. He cites the controversy over the creation of the world, as representing one of the most dangerous tendencies in current thought and action."

must ask again 'what does this world mean and what is it worth for us?' If one would be a good American today—if one would be a good man—then let him study philosophy."

ISSUE ORDER TO WRITE TO MOTHERS

R. O. T. C. Men Requested To Send Letters to Mothers on Mother's Day, May 9

Colonel Jewett has issued a general order requesting that all R. O. T. C. members write to their mothers on Mother's Day, next Sunday.

"I don't know what your custom here is," said the Colonel, "but I do know that we make a great deal of this day in the Army. I hope that every man in the R. O. T. C. takes this order to heart."

The order is as follows:
1. The following instructions have been received from the War Department:

"You are directed to bring to the attention of every officer and enlisted man in your command, the desire of the Secretary of War that each officer and enlisted man write a letter to his home on Mother's Day, the second Sunday in May, May 9, 1926, as an expression of the love and reverence we owe to the mothers of our country.

By order of the Secretary of War:
ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Major General,
The Adjutant General."
2. It is enjoined on all members of the R. O. T. C. unit to comply with the above instructions. Instructors will call attention to this order in all their classes.

the old art, not the first of the new. It is the last attempt of natural science, physics and mathematics to put its hand on art. The poetry of Edwin Arlington Robinson represents the new type of poetry, and the Nebraska capitol the new type of architecture. The present tendency is to put spiritual life into every day life.
