WE SECOND THE MOTION!

STUDENTS TEACHING THEIR TEACHERS

"All our colleges now seem to be asking their students to assume, for a time, the task of teaching their teachers. Dartmouth led the way in this matter, soliciting from the undergraduates a very complete report of their views of higher education as supplied them at Hanover, what they think is good about it and what they think is wrong. Bodwin and Middlebury have likewise sought counsel of their seniors and sophomores, their juniors and freshmen. And now the ink has scarcely dried up on all reports of the Harvard Student Council 'committee on education,' when the students of Yale, at the direct instance of President Angell, begin the making of a similar canvass. The questionnaire issued to students at New Haven today is believed to be, if anything, a more extensive inquiry into student opinion, a more searching request for light upon the student's own way of stating his hopes, ambitions and needs, and what he thinks the university can do to help fulfill them, than any yet issued.

"What an extraordinary development this is in the collegiate world! Fifty or more years ago it would have been quite unthinkable. In an American college of the eighteenth or nineteenth century any proposal that the students should be asked to state in public what they thought of their teachers and teaching, would not merely have been considered horrible, it would have been horripliant. Chills and fever of outraged authority would have shaken the whole faculty from the president down to the youngest assistant instructor. Nor was the situation greatly altered no longer than 15 years ago. We have in mind a certain undergraduate editor of a New England college newspaper. Constantly, in 1911 and 1912, he strove to make the point that it was important for the administrators of a college to know what the undergraduates were thinking. He held this true whether the students were right or wrong, and perhaps more important if they were wrong, as very likely they might be, than if they were right. For he argued the greatest task of a college is to encourage right thinking. If an inquiry would show that the students, for the most part, were thinking wrongly about various matters of their collegiate education and teaching, why wasn't it very important for the authorities to discover this? The reasoning seemed correct, but 15 years ago it awakened no official response in any quarter.

"Today, as has been said, the theory of the worth of students' opinion concerning their studies and indeed all phases of collegiate life, seems to be winning sudden and widespread acceptance. It is odd, it may even be thought to tread upon dangerous ground; but on the whole it appears very salutary. Throuth the grade schools and the secondary schools the last two decades have witnessed an immense increase of self-criticism and of scientific pedagogical analysis. The colleges, for the most part, have not shared in such surveys. It has been all very well for collegiate departments of education to conduct surveys of preparatory schools and their teaching, but since the colleges themselves stand as the courts of highest resort in the world of education, the practical question has been, 'Who should act, in turn, as their surveyors?' Apparently, the answer is being found, in some part by seeking out college student opinion. Since the responsible heads of our colleges reserve to themselves all authority in determining what part of the students' report is valuable, and what part is pure bunkum, the possible benefits of the movement far outweigh its risks."

First Engineers' Night in 1895

day is this year celebrating its eleven-th birthday. Each year it has been made larger and more spectacular, and this year should be no exception. The Week is now composed of a pep meeting, parade, convocation, open house, field day, and banquet. As in former days, open house on Engineers' Night is still the largest single event. It is at this time that an effort is made to acquaint other students and people throughout the state with Nebraska's engineering college. The remaining events are given in an attempt to bind the students studying engineering a little more closely together, and to create a spirit of fellowship among the student body as a whole.

Get Ready for Summer at the Apex Cleaners & Dyers!

—it's open season for cool, light silken frocks; the psychological time to get white flannels in readiness! Call the Apex if you would have last summer's apparel refreshed to the degree of satisfaction which lessens your desire for new things. White — clothes come back WHITE — not with that grayish tone which bespeaks overworked cleaning fluid. Colored clothes come back with each and every tint beautifully revived, and with fabric enlivened. The Apex is located at 123 S. 23rd, with P. M. Flamondon as president. Phone B3311.

Mother Would Like A Personal Gift From Mayer Bros!

—here are things to select for mothers who prefer chiffon hose to crocheted fascinators; for mothers who can give their daughters a pointer or two about what's what in Vogue this month; for mothers who refuse to be relegated (yet) to the Ancient Order of Elderly Femininity. For such mothers (and that takes in most of all of yours) Mayer Bros. has the Mother's Day Gifts that will be appreciated. Dainty silk underthings, smart neckwear, beautiful scarfs, fine gloves, handkerchiefs, hosiery, and items ad infinitum!

Value-Marvels in Silk Hose at Kinney's!

—here at last is the place to buy below-knee apparel at a saving! If you want a pair of all silk chiffon hose that will look as well as they wear, ask for Kinney's special at $1.79. Among the sturdier stockings, two numbers are especially worthy of mention; an all thread silk service hose at $1.29 a pair, and an all thread silk service hose at 89c a pair. All these, of course, are obtainable in every fashionable shade, so come to Kinney's and prepare for any and all runners!

New Summer Dresses for $16.95 at The Famous!

—bought especially for those of you who must keep in the fashion swim at the least possible outlay! Gay little sports frocks of striped tub silks; adorable little chiffon dresses that will swell the ranks of heavy suitors. The styles are collegiate, the colors are legion, the price will make a hit with even the most depleted allowance. Shop at the Famous too, for the smart little things of dress; blouses, vests, silk underthings, scarfs, hose, bags—all surprisingly attractive, and surprisingly low priced.

New Picture Frames at Eastman Kodak Stores, Inc!

—artistic swinging or easel frames that will set off to perfection your most cherished photographs!
