COLLEGES DIFFER ON PROHIBITION

Eastern Schools Favor Modification, Western Universities Desire No Change in Law

NEW YORK, (By New Student Service)

College students of the East favor modification while undergraduates of the middle and west are for maintaining the eighteenth amendment intact. This generalization holds true in the returns so far reported by the National Student Federation referendum. Cornell and Yale are strongly for modification, Connecticut Wesleyan went "dry" by a slim majority, and now Williams reports 260 for modification, 99 against. Heidelberg College favored prohibition by a vote of 219 to 81. Indications of a huge vote to be piled up for prohibition are in evidence. At Kansas Wesleyan college the student body voted to send a telegram to the senate stating that the college was for prohibition. The vote was taken after a chapel lecture by the state superintendent of the anti-saloon league.

Parade at Atlanta

In Georgia a methodist pastor told an assembly of Emory University students of a monstrous parade to be held in Atlanta to "biff John Barleycorn." He explained that it will be youth's protest against the propaganda the wets are creating about the young people of America becoming boozers and "going to the devil." Willard Hay, newly-elected president of the Liberal Arts Council, is heading the campaign at Emory. He is confident that Emory will do her part in showing the anarchists of America this false presumption on their part. It is probable that the Emory band will also lend its stirring strains to the occasion. Pictures of this magnificent parade will be filmed for the movies and for the rotogravure sections of newspapers all over the country. It will be an epoch-making incident in the life of Atlanta's youth and in the enforcement of the prohibition movement. It will show that students and young people are in favor of "enforcement of the law instead of weakening it." And it is only fitting that Emory should head the procession.

Lived in World of Thought

"He enjoyed intellectual companionship and social life in the finer academic sense. In the lower sense he was untouched by the desire to participate strongly in what may be termed the worldliness of a prosperous community, and he exhibited the wise frugality of the best representatives of those who walk through in the world of thought and not in the world of sense. "During the many informal discussions that I have had with him, ranging in lighter vein over a wide variety of topics, there was one thing that I always noticed—his reverence towards things spiritual, his respect for organized religion, and his sympathy towards all who were trying in any way to benefit humanity. "Perhaps most interesting of all to me is the attitude that his former students feel toward him. This is most difficult for me to express adequately. The regard of his students was cumulative. At first they would see only the exterior. Their attitude towards him was one of constant progress. He never tried to make the callow freshmen adore him, but he stimulated them. The progression might be as follows: First, questioning; then recognition, followed by appreciation. Appreciation passed to enthusiasm, enthusiasm to veneration. This course of mental progress was true, not only of students who were satisfactory from the start, but of those whom he was obliged to discipline most severely. Few people have been able to produce as fine results as he out of material that at the beginning seemed in a few instances rather unpromising. A part of the secret of this is that the students came to see that he had boundless affection for them and a most sincere desire for their progress and well-being. He never spared their feelings when it was necessary to correct their faults, and they had that high regard for him that one has for the surgeon who has rendered him great service at the cost of some temporary pain. "The passing of Professor Fogg

the near future. Chancellor Samuel Avery will give his annual report at this time, instead of at the general meeting on Saturday. More interest than usual is being taken in the interfraternity baseball contest this year. The finals in the elimination contest will be played in the stadium at 10 o'clock Friday and skins will be awarded to the winner and runner-up.

Law Barbecue

The annual law barbecue for students, faculty, and graduates of the College of Law will be the usual festive affair at the Lincoln Automobile Club Park Friday, beginning at 11:30 o'clock. Baseball and other entertainment will provide amusement after the anticipated "feed."

Friday afternoon will be given over mostly to the thirty-fourth annual competitive drill of cadets. A competitive drill between the six best platoons will be a new feature of the day and according to custom the regiment will be reviewed by the honorary colonel, Miss Frances McChesney, and the co-ed sponsors.

The final individual events of "compel" will take place in the evening as part of the carnival at the coliseum.

Memorial Service for Lees

The memorial service for the late Dr. James T. Lees, which was originally planned for Wednesday at 11 o'clock, has been changed to 5 o'clock on Friday. This will enable out-of-town alumni and former friends of Dr. Lees to attend. There will be a brief group of addresses and musical numbers in Grant Memorial Hall followed by the dedication of the oak tree planted near University Hall in memory of Dr. Lees. His ashes will be buried beneath its branches. Dr. R. H. Wolcott is chairman of the committee in charge. The climax of gaiety for the Round-up will come on Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock, when Alumni and students will join in the "final frolic" or Carnival of Fun at the new Field House.

Saturday morning—Alumni Day

The program will start with the class breakfasts at 9 o'clock for the special reunion classes. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Roberts are inviting the members of the honor class, 1906, to have breakfast with them at the University Club. The class of 1918 will also meet at the club for a breakfast and election of officers.

The class of 1900 will gather at Le Petit Gourmet for breakfast for which arrangements are being made

"Avenue of Years"

The coliseum will be open at 11 o'clock for the general reunion along the "avenue of years" where each class may group its own members. A parade of students with their parents who were also formerly University of Nebraska students will be an innovation this year at the noon hour. A silver loving cup will be given to the "old grad" father or mother who has the most children in University now, provided they all march in the parade. Robert F. Craig, 24, is lining up the second generation students for this new feature.

Two performances will be given by the University Players of one of their best productions at the Temple Theater. These will be given at 3 o'clock and 8:15. These showings are for all alumni. Saturday evening many more organization banquets are being planned.

Registration headquarters during the Round-up will be maintained at the Alumni office on the first floor of the Temple. Each alumnus will be supplied there with tickets for the various home-coming events.

Tribute Paid to Professor Fogg

"Professor Fogg's service at Nebraska, interrupted only by a leave of absence when he was with the educational department of the A. E. F. in France, began in 1901 and continued up to the time of his final illness.

Nearly all of his friends assembled here are familiar with his record. I need not dwell upon it. It was evident from the moment of his arrival that a vigorous, virile personality had entered the campus. A number of those friends here to do him honor were members of his famous debating teams and worked with him in his "Think Shop." Stimulating students to think received emphasis at his hands long before it became a popular subject of discussion in academic circles. His desire to cause students to think led to his desire to lead them in forcefully, accurately and fearlessly expressing their convictions. Thinking was the basis of his work in argumentation; his work in argumentation naturally directed his attention to journalism, a field in which he had experience before coming to Nebraska. His work in the field of journalism has been, with the modest resources at his disposal, highly successful and greatly appreciated by the young men and women who attended his classes, as well as by the press of the state. If his life could have been prolonged and his services continued for ten years more, I have no doubt that the students whom he was training in journalism would make as relatively large places for themselves as the graduates of his argumentation classes have made in public life.

A Tireless Worker

"One of the fundamental causes for his success was his tireless industry. He literally wore himself out prematurely through his devotion to duties, partly imposed on him, and partly self-imposed. He never thought of rest or recreation. His thoughts were always directed towards the university, its broader interests, his immediate departmental interests, and, above all, his own students. No task was too great for him to undertake, no duty too insignificant cant to command his attention.

"He was an unusually right-minded man, ideal in his home relations, ideal in his attitude toward his country during the great war. He was ardent in his support of principles, yet tolerant of those who could not see with the same clear vision the principles that he espoused.

"He was one of the most loyal and unselfish of men. I have known few men in any great organization who so gladly saw the advancement of others, who worried so little about his own relative recognition.

"He enjoyed intellectual companionship and social life in the finer academic sense. In the lower sense he was untouched by the desire to participate strongly in what may be termed the worldliness of a prosperous community, and he exhibited the wise frugality of the best representatives of those who walk through in the world of thought and not in the world of sense.

"During the many informal discussions that I have had with him, ranging in lighter vein over a wide variety of topics, there was one thing that I always noticed—his reverence towards things spiritual, his respect for organized religion, and his sympathy towards all who were trying in any way to benefit humanity.
