Wisconsin Student Finds Decreased Intemperance Among Poor Families

Prohibition has brought about a marked decrease in intemperance among dependent families.

That is the conclusion given in a thesis submitted recently by Helen M. Voorhees of New York City as part of the requirement for the master of arts degree at the University of Wisconsin.

Miss Voorhees studied more than 1,000 case records in the files of the Madison Public Welfare association for the years 1916 and 1924, and analyzed the facts there recorded by social workers. The years 1916 and 1924 were chosen because they were about equidistant from the time when the national experiment in prohibition began—1920.

In 1916, Miss Voorhees found, of 507 dependent families assisted by the association, 113 owed their plight in some degree to drinking by one or more members of the family. In 1924 but 20 of 512 cases on the records of the association needed help because, among other reasons, of intemperance.

Investigation in Percentage
 Translated into percentages, her investigation showed that 22.3 per cent of dependent Madison families in 1916 were needy partly or wholly because of drink, while in 1924, only 3.9 per cent of dependent families were influenced by liquor.

Miss Voorhees also explored the relations between various factors, for example, the correlation of drinking with unemployment, with physical disability, and the connection between physical disability and adult mental deficiency.

Miss Voorhees stated her conclusions in part as follows:

"From this study of over 1,000 dependent families influenced by intemperance there are a few facts which stand out clearly, unclouded by any other issues.

The University of Nebraska dairy products judging team took sixth place in competition with ten other teams, and the senior dairy cattle team placed fifteenth with twenty-four competing teams at the National Dairy show held in Indianapolis.

Miss Louise Pound, of the department of English spoke on "Western Traditional Songs" at Cotner College. The songs were illustrated at the piano by Lenore Van Kirk, who is director of music at Cotner.

Station WHA, University of Wisconsin, has been rebuilt and is radio-casting programs on a wave length of 535.4 meters.

Decrease Undisputed

"In the first place, there is the undisputed fact that there has been a marked decrease of intemperance between the years 1916 and 1924 in the families which stand in need of assistance. In the former year more than one-fifth of the case load families of the Public Welfare association suffered from drink; in the latter year less than one-twelfth were so afflicted.

"The old condition of the pre-prohibition days when the family bread winner took his weekly pay envelope to the corner saloon to repay the debt of the past week and to begin a new account, leaving all too little to take home for the support of his wife and children is not now existent. So much good can be credited to prohibition: evidently the average bread winner today, even though he does not forswear alcoholic drink has enough of his earnings left with which to support his family. At least there is comparatively little need to ask for help.

Two Other Factors

"There are, however, two other facts to be noted. Both unemployment and physical disability are greater factors than formerly in the families affected by drink. The unemployment cannot be credited entirely to intemperance, for conditions in 1924 were not so prosperous as in 1916, when work was plentiful. Employers can probably find enough non-drinking working men now to fill their places, and are less likely to employ those who are known to be intemperate. Hence the little work that the present day poor drinking man has is likely to be taken away from him. It is this fact doubtless which accounts also for the greater prevalence of debt in the drink-afflicted families."

Several successful graduates of the geology department visited the University during the past week. Mr. J. B. Burnett, '16, chief geologist of the Lago Petroleum Corporation of Maricao, Venezuela, lectured to the geology classes upon structural and oil geology.

John Regan, a student in the University last year, is also a geologist of the same corporation and is working under the direction of Mr. Burnett.

Claire Metheny, '25, is now a geologist for the Sinclair Oil Company with head quarters at Wichita Falls, Texas, and Charles Rankin holds a like position with the Humble Oil and Refining Company, of Shreveport, La.
