U HALL AGAIN

Old University Hall is no longer a tradition, and has no real cause for remaining on the campus, save that the appropriations are not large enough to allow a new building in its place.

There are still those who cry that it should be left standing till its foundations crumble because of the memories of the days gone by. They picture a touching scene when the old grad returns, and with tears in his eyes, gazes fondly on the ruins of what used to be a place of torture for conjugating irregular french verbs. One romantic alumnus declared that he hoped it would stand forever, for when he first saw his wife, she was coming out of the old building, but it is rumored that another less sentimentally inclined individual wished it torn down for the same reason.

U Hall is no longer a tradition. Had it remained a normal, full-grown building, with a bell in its tower, which tolled on state occasions we would all do homage to its age, and reverence it for memory's sake. Each initial scratched in its limestone foundation would recall the days when fond couples walked about the campus in the evening, enjoying the scenery.

In its present state it is more than an eyesore. A picturesque ruin could be tolerated even in an ultra-modern, mid-west town, but a lopped-off building, with no pretence to beauty left, is a disgrace. The bell and tower have long since vanished, along with the upper floors. What remains is disgustingly sticky with tan paint that refuses to dry after many months. Doors spring open at surprising times, and during the winter months, the winds blows a regular gale through the drafty corridors, and whistles about the loose window frames.

There is no reminiscence connected with the unintelligible names scratched on the stones, for the young people who put them there have been gone for years, and the present students are not the type to take a day or two to dreaming over the old sweethearts who put them there. The campus is a place to work, and the very nicest moonlight night does not tempt even one amorous couple.

A tradition should rightly be something worthwhile which could be handed down with the idea in view to benefit the persons concerned, or, as in this case, the school. U Hall can claim no such justification for its existence, or any good reason for not being razed, save the purely financial one caused by the legislature.

The old Armory had no such romantic hold on the men's athletic department when they moved into their new building, and it is unfortunate that the scholastic side of school life should be handicapped by such illusions. U Hall is no longer a tradition, if it ever could lay any claim to the title, and it should be torn down to make place for a building where people will be able to think of the future, not of the past.

THE PRAIRIE SCHOONER

The announcement last week of the publication of a literary magazine meets with the approval and rejoicing of many persons on the campus, both students and faculty members.

There is undoubtedly a great deal of remarkable material here—witness the caliber of the few works of students which have been published, and probably the main reason that others have not been heard from is because there has been no suitable vehicle.

The Daily Nebraskan is unable to publish a literary supplement, as many school papers do, and the Awgwan would hardly be interested in this type of work. So it remained for an entirely different sort of magazine to come forth, and we hope that the Prairie Schooner will take this place.

At first it may be hard to arouse enthusiasm from the hard working University people, but this is to be expected. Other schools have similar publications, and Nebraska has grown so that it too should be represented in the literary field with student efforts.

The Prairie Schooner will not be the kind of a magazine to pick up when in a light or frivolous mood, but it is for those who have distinct literary taste, aspirations, or interests. It is those persons who deliberately seek erudition who will welcome it, and who will ultimately help in its success. They will be the ones who will be able to understand and appreciate its point of view, and in time perhaps add to it.

This new venture shows that Nebraska University is not solely an institution built around a stadium, but that it still has some scholars who are eager to show that there is real worth in higher education.

Other Opinions

The Daily Nebraskan assumes no responsibility for the sentiments expressed by correspondents and reserves the right to exclude any communications whose publication may for any reason seem undesirable. In all cases the editor must know the identity of the contributor.

Send The Band

Next Saturday night the R. O. T. C. band is giving a benefit dance at the Coliseum, the proceeds of which are to help pay the band's way to the Washington game. Besides this money, each band man who makes the trip is paying twenty-five dollars out of his own pocket. There is no reason why every student on the campus who is financially able to do so should not buy a ticket to this dance.

In the past, tag days and other means were resorted to when the band needed money for a trip. But this year, every student who buys a ticket will be receiving full value for the money he gives. This dance is not charity or anything of the kind. It is simply a business proposition. If enough students buy tickets and the affair is a success, the band will probably make the trip.

If the band makes the trip, it means that there will be forty loyal Cornhuskers in the stands, backing the team with every iota of energy they have. And it will be one of the best advertisements the University of Nebraska has ever sent half way across the United States.

No one needs to be told that the R. O. T. C. band is one of the most useful organizations on the campus and no one needs to be told that there is no group of men on the campus that does more to help the team, our team, win, than the band.

How about it students? Do you want the band to go to Washington? If you do, the best way you can express your opinion is to buy a ticket to the next varsity dance. The band is paying part of its own way, and is selling tickets to the dance. The rest is up to you!

College Press

THE PESTIFEROUS ALUMNI

(The McGill Daily.)
Under this suggestive title Percy Marks, notorious for his contribution to the literature that depicts college life, deals with the problems arising in the relation between the alumni and the college in an article which appeared in a recent issue of Harper's magazine.

He tells the story that several college presidents were discussing what they would do after they retired. What would they be fit for, was the question. Well, said one of them, "I don't know that I'd be fit for anything, but I know what I'd like to do. I'd like to be the superintendent of an orphan asylum so that I would never get any letters from any parents."

"I've a much better ambition," exclaimed another, "I want to be a warden of a penitentiary. The alumni would never come back to visit."

Mr. Marks is concerned with the problem as it exists in the American colleges where the continued interference of graduate societies in the administration of university affairs has rendered the lives of many college heads unbearable. Especially do the alumni manifest an insatiable desire to control the athletic policies of their alma mater and in this there is no bounds to their enthusiasm. There can not be enough of rah-

The use of Wrigley's chewing gum after every meal takes care of this important item of personal hygiene in a delightful, refreshing way—by clearing the teeth of food particles and by helping the digestion.

The result is a sweet breath that shows care for one's self and consideration for others—both marks of refinement.

raising and blatant exhibitions of organized cheering to satisfy their hungry souls.

This tendency in American education is to be deplored. While pretending an appreciation of the spirit behind this enthusiastic interest in the affairs of their alma mater, university heads should not permit themselves to be intimidated by blustering alumni. The graduates who have passed out of the active arena of undergraduate activity have not the right in the administration of the college; they may not dictate the policies of the university of which they no longer form an integral part.

and entertainment is already scheduled for the coming attraction.

Tickets are limited
Tickets are to be placed on sale today at the Military offices for all advanced course R. O. T. C. officers, and by fraternity representatives. An allotment of fifteen tickets has been allowed each fraternity and fifty tickets will be sold through Latsch Brothers for the convenience of Lincoln people desiring to attend the Ball. It is the first time that the Ball has been open to the Lincoln alumni and only because of the orchestra feature is it possible this year.

John Boyer, who is in charge of the ticket sales, is desirous that all fraternity representatives announced in the Tuesday Daily Nebraskan who have not yet received their tickets get them this afternoon at 5 o'clock in Room 205 Nebraska Hall. The limited tickets placed on sale makes it necessary for them to be sold immediately in order that representatives who are unable to dispose of their number may turn them back to be distributed to those demanding more.

The entire ticket committee will meet next Monday afternoon to report and check in tickets unsold in Nebraska Hall, Room 205 at 5 o'clock.
