AS OTHERS SEE US

The trip which the football team took to Seattle undoubtedly was of benefit to the University financially, since an enormous crowd attended the game. This is not the only benefit which the University and the state derived from the trip, however. Something not quite so tangible but of great importance is the good will which the actions of our team has caused to exist between the two sections of the country.

The far west is greatly impressed with the way Coach Bearg and the Cornhuskers took their defeat. Like the good sport that he is, Coach Bearg did not complain about the weather or anything else. The far west liked that. Then when they were defeated, the members of the team offered no excuse and no alibi, they merely praised the other team. After such a defeat as the one at Seattle, it takes real men to say "We were defeated by a better team." The Nebraska football players proved to the far west that they were just such men.

To show what those people think of our team, we reprint the following editorial which appeared in the Oregon Sunday Journal on November 28, and was sent to The Daily Nebraskan by Louise K. Brace, secretary of the Portland Alumnae association:

As the Nebraska football team passed through Portland after a heartbreaking defeat by the University of Washington at Seattle, members of the aggregation said:

"We were beaten by a great team in a great game."

At Corvallis, the day of the recent Oregon-O. A. C. clash, the American flag, the Oregon colors were all draped together over the city, and signs read, "Welcome Oregon."

After another coast game this year a defeated team said, almost in chorus, in the only comment:

"We were defeated by a better team."

It has been the same story in scores of other instances during the recent season—the highest type of sportsmanship has been the order of the day, a feeling of warm friendship has been encouraged between rival college towns, and a spirit of honorable and clean competition has been fostered.

There has been criticism of athletics in our schools. There have been those, even, who advocated the elimination of the games. But sports which spur men on to clean competition, which cement the friendships between rival cities, and which build up character, manhood and a spirit of sportsmanship of the highest type, are not games to do America very much harm. Instead, they are molding men.

ANOTHER CHANCE

"Did you see that awful slam at the Tassels?" queried an ambitious freshman. "They were certainly knocking the honoraries, and we Mystic Fish are going to get busy. We don't want them to say anything about us."

The above conversation was heard on the steps of the library building, and we really felt encouraged. At least somebody reads the Daily Nebraskan and takes note of the opinions there expressed. They may be only freshmen, but those freshmen will be seniors four years from now—unless they, too, "fall by the wayside." However we were not "knocking" anybody; we did not even condemn the Tassels as one of the "useless" organizations of the campus, but called their attention to the fact that there was real work to be done. This work is that for which the organization was formed; namely, the promotion of spirit and good fellowship on the campus. The Tassels have not "fallen by the wayside" (at least we didn't think so), but circumstances seem to show that they passed there—that they are resting on their laurels, so to speak.

Why shouldn't the Tassels turn in more subscriptions than any other organization? There are more of them than there are members of any of the honoraries, and besides it is, and we believe fairly, the custom of those who are members of both the Tassels and an honorary to give their support to the Tassels, because of the position of that organization as a leader upon the campus. We only contend that the organization should not falter under its obligations.

December 10 the Tassels will have an opportunity to reinstate themselves in the opinions of those who criticized the stunt of the Cornhusker Luncheon. It may be true that inconveniences in the arrangement of the Coliseum increased the difficulties of presenting a program there, but we call attention to the fact that the other numbers of the day were a decided success. However the Girl's Cornhusker party will be given in the Armory which presents the same difficulties under which successful stunts have been put on in the past.

It is the custom at this time for each of the honoraries and the Tassels to present a stunt or some other addition to the program. We can honestly say that the one they put on last year at that time was as much of a success as this last one was a failure. It is now up to them, and the final judges of the merits of the case are of course the students of the campus and not the Daily Nebraskan.

ledger. There is a place in the ledger for each society and their balance can be determined at any moment by reference to the ledger.

All bills incurred by student organizations are sent to the student activities office. Vouchers are then made out for them indicating the organization owing the money. The voucher is next turned over to the treasurer of the organization concerned. No bills are paid without the approval of the treasurer of the proper organization although all bills are paid from the student activities office.

After the voucher has been approved by the proper treasurer, the bill is paid by check by the agent for student activities and the amount paid checked against that organization's ledger account. When the cancelled checks are returned, they are filed in the voucher which approved their payment. Thus, if any organization can secure the cancelled check from the student activities office as confirmation.

Complete Set of Books Kept

A complete set of books is kept, furnishing a continuous process which is a substantial improvement over former haphazard methods of handling the funds of student organizations. They are regularly audited and the agent for student activities is bonded so that all parties are well protected. Money once deposited to the credit of an organization remains credited to them until their treasurer approves vouchers turning the money to other channels.

Several organizations with balances on the books of the student activities office have become extinct or at least inoperative. However, their funds will be carried in their name until they assign them to someone else or to some other organization. Thus, the class of 1919 left a balance of $140. This will be carried until the class of 1919 spends it. The same is true of the class of 1924 which left a balance of ten cents.

Organizations Purchase Bonds

Another phase of the handling of the finances of student organizations is investments. Several organizations with substantial balances have purchased bonds. They are kept in the University vaults, the coupons clipped, and the interest credited to the organization. The Latin club, for

Cleanliness

"Cleanliness is indeed next to godliness," Wesley, the great preacher, said long ago; and to this day many believe it to be a quotation from the Bible. Cleanliness, we said in Instalment No. 4 is Manager Harris' hobby, if we may use that word without offense.

Keeping cooking utensils clean is no slight task, as any housewife knows, even in a small family kitchen; but when we cook for hundreds—even thousands—daily, the task is increased a hundredfold.

Mr. Harris saw that a great advantage could be gained by having the short-order cooking and the dishing up done in the front of the cafe instead of at the back. Any carelessness or slovenliness would be more readily detected. It would be easier to keep the fry station and utensils clean.

So he installed his fry station at the front. In a year or two he found it necessary to order a much larger station, made specially for him according to plans he and his chefs had worked out, and at a cost which would build a very comfortable bungalow.

instance, purchased bonds from surplus funds a number of years ago. Later the club died and was reorganized just this year. During the period of several years in which it was not in existence, interest from its bonds was credited to it as usual.

There are about one hundred organizations on the campus which make use of this accounting system furnished by the University through the agent for student activities. A number of these are ones whose membership changes completely each year. If their funds were kept separately, the account might not be transferred, might be lost, or several other things might happen to it. Under the present system, these funds are carried over from one year's group to the next year's group without confusion.

Office May Advance Money
The office offers still another advantage to student organizations and activities. The pooling of funds gives it a very substantial account at the bank. Thus, the agent for student activities can advance money to organizations when it will mean a considerable saving to them.

In this manner, money may be advanced to the Cornhusker each fall when it hasn't a cent, in order to make it possible for it to take advantage of discounts on its paper and engraving bills. Money is never advanced unless it is practically certain that the organization will have sufficient income to repay the office. Another instance of advancing money which has been very beneficial is in the case of glee clubs. On several occasions they have been advanced money to cover expenses of trips with the money being paid back from their receipts from the trip.

Through this office, all student organization funds are audited. Tickets of any nature must be validated by the agent for student activities. Then his men are on the doors at all functions and the receipts must check with the tickets accepted at the door.

—Many other styles at 75c, $1 and $1.25 each.

If you want pretty handkerchiefs do not miss the showing you will find at Rudge & Guenzel's.

Students are beginning to realize that this is a protection to them instead of a nuisance. Any number of schools have copied the system of handling student organization funds which is in use here.

Handles Athletic Funds
The agent for student activities in his position of business manager for athletics handles all athletic funds. All athletic income and bills come through his office. Incidentally, it is the only office of the University whose funds do not go through the finance secretary. The athletic funds are under the control of the University Athletic Board which was set up by the Board of Regents.

The financing of the coliseum has been handled through this office. Due (Continued on page three)
