Future Policy Of University Is Discussed

continue to be difficult to secure a state. There is no use denying that. The only question that remains is whether the result to be secured justifies the expense. When we look at the University ideal of service to the state and what it is accomplishing for the state, when we realize the University's success in bettering the citizenry of the state and conditions in the state, and when we realize the value of offering opportunities for development of the highest order to a constantly increasing proportion of the youth of the state, we can hardly fail to justify such expenditures as may be necessary for the continued development of the University. In the long run, can there be anything of more fundamental value, anything which will have a more lasting beneficial effect on the state and its people?

Some criticism has been directed at the University for the emphasis placed on athletics. Such criticism has not been as great nor as vigorous as similar criticisms of many schools because the position of athletics has not been as disproportionate at Nebraska as it has in many institutions. The needs of the athletic department have, however, to a large extent been satisfied, much better satisfied than the needs of the University as a whole. Athletic needs have been satisfied because people have been more willing to furnish money for athletic development than for the satisfying of other needs of the University.

Adequate Funds a Necessity

Until people are willing to provide money necessary for satisfying the other needs of the University, it will proper balance between interest in athletics and interest in education proper. Money was applied for athletics because the athletic work could not be carried on satisfactorily without it. The same line of reasoning should be followed in regard to the rest of the University. The other important duties of the University cannot be carried on satisfactorily under unfavorable material conditions. One difference exists. Athletic needs have been satisfied to a considerable extent by voluntary contributions. Other needs of the University, for the most part, have had to be satisfied by taxation. Nevertheless, it all comes back to the fact that people have shown themselves more willing to contribute to satisfying athletic needs than to satisfying other needs of the University.

The pioneers of the state made heavy sacrifices that the University might be established. They believe in it as a factor in building a better life for the future. The state of today, which has been benefitted by those sacrifices, owes it to the state's pioneers to provide for the University that it may continue to work for a better state in the future. The state of today should pay this debt by judicious choice of expenditures, or, if necessary by sacrificing along less important lines.

One of the chief arguments for University training in recent years has been the greater earning capacity of University graduates. The day when a large majority of University graduates can readily pile up a fortune is fast disappearing. Graduates are too numerous in comparison with the number of opportunities for garnering great wealth. The arguments for the University of the future must be of a different type. Should Stress Cultural Aspect

The training which has been given and is being given is steadily elevating the general level of life on the material side. As the general material level advances, more opportunities are opened for spiritual or cultural development, as we may term it. The University of the future should continue its efforts for the material advancement of the people. It should also aid in the development of this other side of life for which more time becomes available as our material level advances.

If the graduates of the University can carry with them from the University such knowledge and insight as will make them able to appreciate the achievements of mankind, in government, in art, in literature, in science, and in philosophy, such insight as will enable them to develop as satisfying an internal life, as the external life which is being developed for them, the University will have begun to achieve what we may call its ultimate mission.

Training Should Be Inspiring

If the University graduate who finds himself in a routine job has such interests, he has the sources of inspiration which can keep him from feeling and seeing only the relentless monotony of the world's work which must be done. He can be a better man both to himself and to others. The point we are trying to make here is that the University of the future has a mission in training for leisure just as the University has a mission in training for work. The University of the future must do both. As the material level advances, there will be more opportunity for development of the things which, throughout man's history, have stood out as his greatest and most significant achievements, things which can be accomplished only after the satisfaction of man's material needs. Youth is entitled to the opportunity to so develop that it can appreciate and evaluate these interests. Thus, hand in hand, with its readiness to train for service which will raise the material condition of the state, the University of the future should be in a position to supply all, rather than a few, as is the case now, with opportunities for this non-material development.

We see then that the state owes it to itself to maintain the University in such a manner that the institution can continue to develop. We realize that, as it develops, it is constantly turning back into the state citizens better qualified along one line or another to work for the development of a better state. We see that the University can develop only as it is supported and that if the state properly supports the University, it receives untold benefits in return. And finally, we see that as the general welfare of the state advances, the University holds the key position for the development of a citizenry with higher ideals and interests, living in a steadily progressing civilization.

New Books

The Nebraskan will publish from time to time lists of the more interesting new books that have been placed on the shelves of the Library for circulation. For the convenience of readers, we are giving the call number of each title. These lists do not, by any means, represent the entire amount of the new additions to the Library. They are simply a selected group of the more interesting of the recently published books that have been added.

problems of the freer womanhood, such as decreasing birthrate, divorce, reducing and the bobbing of hair. "Manufacturing, banking, industrial crises, capitalistic domination colonial exploitation, were all factors in ancient economic life. Even the problem of what to do with the farmers to keep them on an economic level with the rest of the country was very pressing to the ancients.

Politics Date Back

"In politics it is especially noticeable that the classical civilization is our contemporary. Our revolutionary statesmen were raised on classical polity. There were the same bosses, the same machines, the same grafters, the same filibusters. Indeed it is only today that we can begin to understand the politics of the ancients.

The Greeks were essentially new in their outlook upon life, laying securely foundations in this respect for our own time. The German historian Beloch has a magnificent sentence in which he sums up our debt to Greece: "It is the Greeks to whom we are indebted for those possessions which alone make life worth living: our art, our science, the ideals of spiritual and political freedom."

"If one be truly educated, he must know a civilization other than his own and what better one could he find to study than this one of the Greeks which is so contemporaneous to our own? The choice spirits of every generation will more and more ponder the minds of the classical civilization."

Sesqui-Centennial Failure Attributed To Lack of Publicity

Philadelphia should have known better. How could the City of Brotherly Love expect to attract a crowd without advertising? When the Sesqui-Centennial's opening date arrived, few people outside of Philadelphia's tributary territory knew about the exposition, its scope location and duration. Few of them would have learned more but for the publicity of distress and failure. Certainly the Pacific Coast was not favored even with requests for free publicity. The secret of the exposition could not have been better kept if the management had hired a suppress agent to keep exposition news out of the papers. Half a million in advertising would have saved Philadelphia a fifteen-million dollar loss.—January Sunset.

Six $1000 Prizes Are Offered To Freshmen For Best Chemical Essays

Six prizes of $1,000 each will be awarded to freshman students of colleges and universities who write the best essays on the following six subjects: The Relation of Chemistry to Health and Disease, The Relation of Chemistry to the Enrichment of Life, The Relation of Chemistry to Agriculture or Forestry, The Relation of Chemistry to National Defense, The Relation of Chemistry to the Home, and the Relation of Chemistry to the Development of an Industry or a Resource of the United States.

This is a chance for freshmen interested in writing essays to enter a national contest. The subjects are varied so that there is an opportunity for many to enter. A contestant may submit only one essay, and the essays must not exceed 2,500 words.

The essays must be submitted not later than March 1, 1927. For any students wishing to enter this contest, additional information concerning the rules may be obtained from Prof. Frankforter, Room 5, Chemistry Hall, before Friday afternoon. This will give students a chance to work on them during the vacation period.

Members of the Chemistry department feel that students from this university might as well be the ones to win these prizes as students from other institutions for it is possible to win more than one of them.

Magazine Publishes Papers by Nebraskans

The December issue of AMERICAN SPEECH contains a number of articles of interest to Nebraskans. Its contents are in part as follows: "The Language Consciousness of College Students," by J. M. Steadman Jr.; "The Plural Forms of 'You,'" by E. C. Hills, "You-All and We-All" by Estelle R. Morrison, "Popular Variants of Yes" by Louise Pound, "Some German-Americanisms of the Middle West" by A. W. Meyer, "American Political Cant" by L. C. Wimberly, "Headline Words," by Harold E. Rockwell, "Legal Lingo" by Reuben Oppenheimer, "To One Editor" by Ellen B. Heckel, "The Current Expansion of Slang" by F. W. Pollock, "A Note on Anglo-Saxon" by Kemp Malone, "The Importance of Speech Defects as a Personal Problem," by Sara M. Stinchfield.

The editor-in-chief of the magazine is Prof. Louise Pound of the University of Nebraska Department of English. L. C. Wimberly is a member of the faculty of the University of Nebraska. Estelle K. Morrison, now a member of the Junior College at Kansas City, is an A. B. and A. M. from the University of Nebraska.

South Dakota Changes Debate Award System

Vermillion, S. D., Dec. 15.—A change in the conditions of the award of the national bank prize of $100 offered annually to the debate squad at the University of South Dakota has been announced by the department of public speaking. Hereafter the prize will be given to the two women and the four men, who, in the judgment of the speech department, have contributed the most to the success of the debating season. The object of the change, according to H. G. Barnes, instructor, is to make the prize more worthwhile and to make the honor more significant than in the past when every member of the squad has received a share of the prize offered. The prize is the gift of two Vermillion banks, the First National and the Vermillion National.

Students in the classical "humanities course" at the University of Wisconsin led all others in scholarship last year.
