

MASS MEETING FEATURES DAY AT AG COLLEGE

forceful style of thinking and delivery.
He showed that the tanner, the packer and the miller were dependent upon the soil. The farmer raises more calves to make more meat and leather for the tanner to tan and for the packer to slaughter and meat for strength to carry on other industries. He also raises wheat for the miller to make the bread to go with the meat which the laborer eats to give him more strength and so the story goes.

Praises Theory and Practice
He stressed the need for the combination of practice with science in agricultural instruction. He praised the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture for the way in which the faculty is doing this, stating that he felt that they had succeeded very well.

In speaking of boys leaving the farm for the "white lights" the speaker made the statement that the duller farm boy could learn to be a fair professional man and follow his business by rule but that it took the brightest that the farm could produce to run such a business successfully. He stated that if it were not for the fresh blood that the rural districts send to the large cities every year "they would perish in their own rottenness."

Activities Building Essential
Prof. H. E. Bradford, speaking for Dean E. A. Burnett, explained to the farm folks the need for the building such as they were gathered in and compared the position of the college of agriculture to a family whose home had become too small to entertain their friends who called. He said that the new activities building would serve as a meeting place for the various groups that meet at the college every year and that he hoped that the farmers would avail themselves of the opportunity often so that those at the agricultural college could learn from the experiences of the farmers while the farmers themselves were learning of some of the new practices that had been developed.

In the morning, Prof. Edwin D. Starbuck, University of Iowa, Iowa City, spoke to a joint meeting of the home economics women, rural school patrons, and the farm bureau federation on "Character Education in the Public Schools."
"By giving the child initiative, co-operation and good will in training his character, we will reach the very foundation of youth, strengthening and purging it, building it into a noble and moral structure that nothing in this world of chance or change can ever shake," he said.

Picture Is Unveiled
At 11:30, a number of the friends of S. C. Bassett, pioneer agriculturist of Gibbon, met to honor his memory and unveil his portrait as the new addition to Nebraska's Hall of Agricultural Achievement. Several gave three minute talks on his activities as a soldier, homesteader, legislator, newspaper writer, horticulturist, dairyman, member of the state board of agriculture, as historian, and home maker. C. H. Morrill gave the address of tribute before the unveiling of the picture by a granddaughter of Mr. Bassett's, Barbara Prouty. Mr. Morrill's tribute was "every loyal Nebraskan should stand uncovered at the time of unveiling of the picture of the premier pioneer whose watchword was stand up for Nebraska and loyalty to the state."

The horticulturists finished their sessions with a program devoted to the apple industry. Most of the discussion concerned marketing problems and storage problems.

The livestock breeders finished the series of meetings of the week with a banquet held jointly with the dairymen at the Lincoln Hotel. Their morning session was devoted to beef cattle. Hon. Duncan Marshall who spoke at the mass meeting in the afternoon talked on "Livestock and Prosperity." Mr. Marshall brought to the United States some of the ideas which he has developed in his work as an agriculturist of Canada serving as minister of agriculture for a time. Other speakers were R. C. Pollock of the National Livestock and Meat Board and J. C. Swift of Swift and Henry Commission company, Kansas City, Missouri.

finds 65 per cent of the seniors having the lowest grades of intelligence are planning to attend college, or worse still, 25 per cent of students possessing the highest grades of intelligence are not thinking of attending college at all.
In conclusion he states "It is highly desirable that teachers recognize individual differences in students in their classes. Our best service to our community comes in finding and developing its leaders."
