The Christian Science Monitor estimates there are something like 100,000 young men and women, in state colleges and universities only, paying part or all of their expenses while they study.

In 24 state universities, the report says, 50,000 are paying for part or all of their education in dozens of strangely varied jobs.

Ten universities are of the belief that more than half of the student body earns some of its money by working.

This calls to mind the report on self-support at the University of Nebraska which was compiled in the spring of 1925.

This is the sort of thing which the public seldom hears about university students.

And the press is not solely to blame. It is a well-known fact that people like to read about others' misdeeds rather than their praiseworthy actions.

It is merely a case of showing our other side. There is no use denying that university students drink, pet, and all the other things that other persons of the same age do and as long as they do these things the public will hear about them.

There is another way in which the public is being hoodwinked all the time. Two or three long-haired professional agitators will get together and start some campaign and call it a part of the "growing youth movement" which is swelling like an approaching storm on the campuses of our universities.

A good example of this occurred at the recent Milwaukee conference. Among the news stories which gushed forth from that conference was a press association dispatch which quoted the executive secretary of the committee on militarism in education at great length.

This, of course, is merely amusing to those in this section of the country who have followed the controversy and know that there are actually about 6,000 students on the campus and that only a handful of them have shown more than a passing interest in the subject so far. But how about the people in the other parts of the country. How are they to know all this?

There really should be some sort of Protective Order for Students. The farmers think they are being imposed upon and the laborers think they are being imposed upon.

"HASH SLINGERS" (Ohio State Lanterns)

Simultaneous in the course of their university careers most male students take a part time job or think of doing so.

Seldom does a student feel this urge after his sophomore year. Whenever a junior or senior has a part time job it is almost certain that he must work to get enough money to keep him in the University.

These part time jobs include almost every kind of work imaginable, taxi cab driving, tending furnaces, clerking, doing newspaper work, acting as professional pall bearer, and so on almost indefinitely.

"Hash-slinging" for the benefit of the laity, is any kind of a job that involves waiting on table or washing dishes. In restaurants, hotels, boarding houses, fraternities, and sororities the hash-slingers can be found.

Hash-slingers may be specialists in their lines and then are called "dishwashers," waiters, or "scavengers" according to their special work.

Nicknames are a testimony of some great triumph in life. Unless you have done some immortal thing, you have not earned the right to have your name shortened and spiced till it is sweet on the tongue.

Too, nicknames are shorteners for some impossible names. Why should we call a bespectacled lad "Archibald" when we can slap him on the back, friend-like, and say "Arch, old boy"?

Little stories about the Central CAFE

As we said in Instalment No. 10, "The Central is a popular cafe"; and that expression is broad enough to cover the question of prices.

For the prices are as low as they can be consistently and cover the cost of rent, food, labor, etc. and leave a profit for the management.

A very satisfying combination can be consistently and cover the cost of rent, food, labor, etc. and leave a profit for the management.

Extremes of College Life Are Too Often Described Today by Authors

The following article from the Minnesota Daily throws some light on the fraternity question:

Seldom, it seems, does an article defending some particular phase of college life find its way into the columns of a periodical.

The current issue of the "Review of Reviews" contains an article by Mr. Frank A. Waugh, carrying the title "The College Fraternity".

Mr. Waugh opens his discussion by citing specific instances wherein college fraternities expressed their disapproval of objectionable conduct by placing offending members at the mercy of the college authorities.

We do not wish to take Mr. Waugh to task for the manner in which he presented the fraternity's case before the public.

No author has yet succeeded in depicting the various phases of a college student's existence so that the reading public is given an authentic image of his daily life.

A sermon in stones

CECIL RHODES, the diamond king, had a real idea which he passed on to diamonds in the rough.

"Be well-rounded men, broad in your sympathies," he said, and he made this the basis for selection of Rhodes scholars.

Surely there's a lesson for every man—graduates alike in arts, in pure science or in applied science—to balance the student in him with the athlete, the individualist with the man of sociability, the specialist with the "citizen of the world."

For Rhodes' idea was no theory. It is shared by hard-headed business men today.
