'One Hoss Shay' Pulls Comeback On University of Oklahoma Campus

Norman, Okla., Nov. 7.—Norman, the home of the University of Oklahoma, is about to lose its twentieth century bearing and dignity, with the rapid replacing of motor cars, forbidden under the university "no car" rule, by the old fashioned "one-hoss shay."

Despite the fact that the "no car" rule has been in effect for five years, students at the institution developed a surprising lack of confidence, this fall, in their ability to move about without the aid of some sort of a vehicle.

Horses, unaffected by the university rule, began to make their appearance on the campus several weeks ago, and city streets have since been over-taxed by traffic in horse-drawn vehicles. Some students have taken to horse-back riding about the campus.

Many students, however, found that horses are expensive, and that it is difficult to find an adequate place to keep them. Roller skates offered a more inviting field and two enterprising students imported five dozen roller skates to Norman. They were sold out within a short time. Bicycles are also becoming popular.

The casual visitor might gasp in surprise at the campus today. The rattle of horses' hoofs on the block pavements mingles with the roar of nearly a hundred ball-bearing skates, and the screech of bicycle sirens and screams of excited co-eds.

So far no one has appeared with a canoe.

SULPHUR AND SILK PICTURED SUNDAY

Mining and Cocoon Processes Are Shown at Morrill Hall in Afternoon Program

"The Story of Sulphur" and "The Romance of Silk" were the films shown at the Morrill hall auditorium Sunday afternoon.

The film on sulphur showed how this mineral is taken out of the ground in the unrefined state, how it is melted and poured into great forms, making yellow blocks of the dimensions of large-sized hills. It is then dynamited to get it into pieces small enough to ship.

The reel on "The Romance of Silk" was beautifully colored, and told of the early history and development of silk. Few persons realize that silk has been used for almost 4,000 years. About 2000 B. C., a Chinese empress discovered that the cocoons of the silk worm could be unwound and woven into a lustrous material which was very attractive.

The Chinese guarded the secret carefully for many years, but finally a monk got some of the eggs and carried them in his hollow walking stick to Europe. It got to Japan through four Chinese girls who indiscreetly gave the secret away. The Japanese became very skillful in making silk, and it is now one of their chief products.

The film also showed the development of the process of making silk. It showed the silk worm in its different stages: that of the moth, the egg, and the caterpillar. It showed how the mates are selected and placed on bamboo twigs to develop. An insight on the various processes in silk manufacture was also given.

With the appointment of eight new members to the faculty of Lawrence College, Wisconsin, within the past two years, the ratio of faculty members to students becomes one to twelve. This is probably the highest of any college in the middle west.

FIRE PROTECTION DECLARED AMPLE

Kansas Dean of Engineering Says Reports of Inadequacy Are "Entirely Incorrect"

Lawrence, Kan., Nov. 7.—Published statements that fire protection for buildings of the University of Kansas is inadequate were declared "entirely incorrect," in a statement issued by George C. Shaad, dean of engineering at the university. The statement followed a conference at the office of Chancellor Lindley, attended by Chancellor Lindley, Dean Shaad, F. M. Dawson, professor of hydraulics, and C. G. Bayles, superintendent of buildings and grounds, and formerly a consulting engineer.

The published articles declared the campus has no water supply available, and that university officials refuse to spend $300 to connect with a city main on the west of the campus to give needed fire protection.

Dean Shaad's statement points out that two years ago, the university, realizing the inadequacy of the Lawrence water supply as a means of fire protection, investigated the situation and at that time considered the value of connecting with the west campus main, then projected. Study showed that such connection, while increasing the flow of water a little, would not materially aid the protection situation, and that a reservoir and university pumps was the only solution.

"CIVILIAN CLOTHES" is one of the big New York hits of recent years. From beginning to end, it is excellent high comedy, though it is based upon the ever-interesting problem of matrimony. The story is concerned with the wonderful lesson given to the snobbish Flo Lamban by her soldier husband, Sam McClintock, whom she had married in France and had given up for dead. A thoroughly brilliant and fascinating comedy, exceptionally interesting to every variety of audience. A typical Playhouse production.
