Lobbying By "Al"

The most interesting place in the world to gather opinions is the lobby of a theater. There are just a few of the notes from my mental notebooks, taken in the lobby of the Lincoln last evening.

"The girl called 'Sugar' can't be more than fourteen or fifteen years old—I didn't like 'Sugar's' voice,—but she certainly is good looking—"Sugar's got a good voice but her face needs lifting—the first two must be brother and sister—O-oh I thought it was darling—worst show I've seen in Lincoln—I'll bet a hundred the two dancers in the last act are both girls—she can't fool me (Speaking of Miss Selby) she's wearing a wig—I've seen this show before, but a don't seem to be able to remember it (Confused it with "The Cohens and The Kellys.")—"

Everyone has an earnest opinion or idea. One person will make a statement and the very next person will flatly contradict the idea of the first statement. And we wonder—why producers get gray at an early age.

The lobby is interesting for another reason. I heard one of the English professors telling about the different personalities that people "adopted" in different places and under different circumstances. He named a lot of good ones but he forgot the best one.

A person may have a hundred different "selves" that he takes to a hundred different places, but none are so interesting as the "self" that he brings to the theater. More often than not a repulsive "self". They like to show off it seems. Either by making a lot of noise or by their behavior.

The favorite medium of attracting attention is by talking unnecessarily loud or by laughing loud and long at remarks and situations that would ordinarily be regarded as foolish. A gag that has been used overtime and has long ago become quite stale, is; "Every child must hold their own ticket." And then they proceed to hand a ticket to every member of the party,—every one joining in on the chorus—loud laughter.

The door-man of the average theater, if he were a good scholar could give a talk on "Human Nature" that would hold an audience spell bound. Don't mention it,—"Al".

Dr. Charters was also director in charge of the Commonwealth Study of Pharmacy.

Players Win Many Praises

light comedy, the smoothness and finish with which it was presented furnished ample opportunity for the humor and entertainment to show to the best advantage.

Elwood Ramay's portrayal of the shrewd, kindly uncle that schemes for the happiness of Marie was a splendid performance, together with Don Helmsdorfer's effective acting of Mr. Thurber, the economical, self-righteous father of Marie.

Good Lead Parts
Miss Gellatley handled her part with ease and distinction. The cast, although small, performed to the one with an unusual naturalness of manner that added materially to the success of the production. Jack Rank and Cecil Schmitt as the rival lovers offered some excellent comic bits which were climaxed by the admirable acting of Erva McFarlane as Mrs. Thurber. Miss McFarlane deserves special commendation for the handling of a difficult role in such a creditable manner.

The value of the play is its true interpretation of the average American small town home, with its leaky refrigerator drain, the troublesome cat that always manages to get in at night, and the typical small town informality that marks the relations of the townsfolk toward each other.

Comedy Is Light

There is freshness, there is an originality about the treatment of the theme that makes a valuable production out of what is otherwise a light play. The wealth of humor and comedy sets off the rather whimsical plot into something that keeps the audience entirely fascinated and in a continuous state of laughter.

The play deals with the schemes of Marie's parents to marry their daughter to the man they have chosen; disturbing factors disrupt their fond plans and broad hints, when Marie, true to her feminine nature, finds her interest waning because of her parents' persistence in draining all the romance out of her love affair. Matters look pretty gloomy until the kindly and philosophical Uncle Dave steps in and deftly manipulates the troubled family like the end he wants. Small town politics enter in, and a sudden change of circumstance blacken matters again, but it finally all ends happily.

Players Commended

The Players have never done better. Their production of a light comedy as this in the middle of a season well stocked with heavier, intricate dramas is worthy of commendation and the popularity of their effort speaks well for their choice.

Huskers Edge Out Ames in Fast Game

one goal, in goals from the floor but the free tossing ability of the Huskers put them ahead.

Game on Ice

The playing of Holm, Nebraska guard, and Brown, Husker forward, featured the floor-game of the visitors. Starting the second half with a one point lead, the Huskers proceeded to pile up their markers and were never threatened after the third quarter.

Glen Munn, Husker center, provided the scoring threat for his team and came out with the same number of points as Lande, high scorer for the Aggies. Lewandowski played a close guarding game and was largely instrumental in getting the ball down the floor to the forwards.

In the second game of the Iowa series, Nebraska will meet Grinnell at Grinnell Friday evening. After their Thursday showing, the Nebraskans are given an even chance for a victory.

ginning, and that their knowledge of zoological, biological, and botanical terms would be increased tremendously before another day had dawned.

Tobacco merchants throughout the city reported a large increase in sales Wednesday. Stock in their stores that had been covered with dust since last year, disappeared rapidly as freshmen hurried in to ask for unthought of brands. Chewing gum stock took a decided jump and it was thought by Friday that the city would be in dire straits for luxuries of that sort.

Every Sound Heard

City residents around fraternity and sorority row complained of disturbances throughout the night. Howlings coupled with screams, mingled with hoots, and mixed with clanging and bangings with an occasional shot, hindered sleeping citizens to such an extent that some freshmen believed officials might intervene and put an end to this terrible suffering.

Nevertheless the battle waged on with little chance of a let-up. Today and Friday should be days of extreme anxiety, and mortuary firms have promised quick service to all parts of the city until Sunday. At least, that is the word carried by some freshmen.

To date, no severe casualties have been reported, but news from wholesale houses says that barrels are at a premium and the demand has far surpassed the supply. Oh! My! What a time everybody is having—

But there must come an end to all good things and Sunday will be upon our wrinkled brows before we are aware of it and what a welcomed day it will be. Anyway, everyone seems to be having a good time!
