Kosmet Show Actors and Actresses Rival Hollywood Stars in Technique

(By Alene Miner)

The great day has come, fair co-eds! You won't have to go to Hollywood to meet all the celebrities. After having a glorious spring vacation you can return to the old grind of study and have some brand new heroes to sigh over.

You can go to your classes and dream that your instructor is Jack Wheelock after you see him play the part of the young college professor in "The Love Hater." If only all the college "profs" were like him Nebraska would have an over-flow of the feminine sex. Jack Gilbert and Harry Langdon know nothing about the art of making love, for when Jack Wheelock gets started he is the kind husbands don't care to have on speaking terms with their wives.

Girls, you wouldn't mind getting slips from Jack reminding you that you have a condition or an incomplete. There would also be another incentive in going into his office, because that perfectly barbered and well tailored "Bud" Baily is his secretary.

There is another who has climbed to the heights with his personality and talent, but let me warn you, fair sisters, not to believe him when he says that his name is Al Abbott, as it is really George Gesman. He is not the ultra-sophisticated actor like Wallace Berry or Lon Chaney, but he is Mr. Personality Plus. As a true fixer he is no slouch, even if he has been in more cabarets than all Hollywood knows about.

He is the newest in flaming youth with the looks—and dance. You've never seen such taps, waltz taps, love taps, and clog taps in all your life. Second warning—remember he has an impish little partner who has no inferiority complex, so it might be well not to put your return address on your letters when you write for his autographed photo.

Ramey is Villian
Adolphe Menjou won't even register as the polished man of the world to the women fans after Elwood Ramey appears as the Italian villian. He is one of those slick bland types with the oily eloquence that sweeps the girls of their feet.

"He's the loganberries fat and sour," says Mizzie of Dr. Santitia, played by Carol Dubry. But girls watch him because he and the countess have been old friends, very personal friends sometime in the dark past.

You used to shriek for "Blue" Howell on the football field, but like

Nebraskan Is Printed By Men In University

All printers are not students and all students are not printers. Nevertheless the printers employed in printing the Daily Nebraskan happen to be students. An all student force has been employed on the mechanical side of the paper since the opening of school in the fall of 1926.

The personnel of men employed in setting up and printing The Daily Nebraskan is: Kenneth Lewis and Henry Brainerd, linotype operators; Wendell Morris and Ralph Pray, floor men, and Carl Wurm (non-student) pressman. All of these men with the exception of the last named are carrying regular schedules in the University besides their work in the printing office.

These men are all enrolled in the School of Journalism. Lewis and Brainerd are seniors and Morris and Pray are sophomores.

When he was bored with a reception which was being held at the University of Washington in his honor, Floyd Dell, modernist writer, skipped out and went to a dance with two-co-eds and a Daily reporter.

The renowned forensic abilities of Harvard undergraduates was given a distinct shock recently when a debate team from Charleton college came out of the West and won an audience decision in a verbal scrap with the Harvard team.
