est as, that Mrs. Hoover was a Kappa and that Al Smith possessed a wonderfully magnetic personality. One was led to suppose that their vote was determined by such information or by blindly following the choice of their fathers.

CHEERS AND WORK Football fans are coming, under the pressure of intelligent sports writers, to recognize the tremendous importance of line play to the game.

Such is the work of Carl Olson, senior in the University, who has had charge of the cheering section. Quietly going about his way, asking no help, asking no praise, doing his job, seeking no reward, Olson has been performing one of the finest types of service to the institution in which he is but one of 6,000 students.

OTHER STUDENTS SAY—

NEBRASKA AND ART Nebraska's new state capitol has been criticized. It has been stated that it is not practical. By whom this accusation is made is not essential to mention.

Among the books that have come out within the last two years, we have picked a half dozen which we consider the best for student reading. Not heavy things, but a mixture of fiction, poetry, and articles.

First, can they afford it? The answer is yes. A state with the wealth and natural resources of Nebraska can easily afford it.

That the majority of people in the state will not appreciate the full artistic significance of the work is to be expected.

It may be a hundred years, it may be five hundred before the "great majority" will come to appreciate it for its true worth.

As a step forward in America's struggle to take her place among civilized nations, the building of such a monument is invaluable.

America is coming to the front in literature, in music and even in painting.

For this reason if for no other, are the people of Nebraska justified in spending several million dollars for their capitol.

THE RESPONSES TO A RULE The question of intellectual freedom in a school shows a distinct difference between a University and a smaller college.

This situation has a peculiar, yet very natural reaction on the students who have an interest in things progressive.

To one then who comes from a small school the atmosphere of which is narrow and the undercurrents of which are dissatisfaction, the liberalism of the University offers an open escape valve for discontent.

The liberalisms takes away the radical's fomentation by giving him what he asks for; the wind comes out of his sails.

BETWEEN THE LINES

The young man had come into the room and sat disconsolately on a table staring at nothing in particular. "What's the matter?" he was asked, "Indigestion?" No, not that, he guessed, but he just wasn't satisfied some way, and he presumed about until he was presumed upon finally to get it off his chest.

There are a great many persons in the world like that. They say they want to write, but spend their time talking about it in wishful tones.

We arch our brows at cheap, colored stuff we see in magazines catering to themes of blood-and-thunder and wild west, yet the authors of those stories at least had the urge to scribble and did get down and write.

Among the books that have come out within the last two years, we have picked a half dozen which we consider the best for student reading.

It is a heavy blow to realize that you are old-fashioned, but somehow we will stand the bludgeoning. Carl Van Vechten made his first big hit with Firecrackers, followed by Nigger Heaven and now by Spider Boy.

And we are awfully sorry, but Count Tolstol is off our list too. Every time we start another of his stories, we invariably go to sleep.

Plans for Torchlight Parade Are Frustrated Approximately two hundred students attended the rally Friday night at the Coliseum prior to the Pitt game.

Clarence Swanson, captain of the 1921 Cornhuskers—the last Nebraska team to vanquish Pittsburgh—addressed the assemblage of students and football enthusiasts.

CONDRA GIVES RADIO TALK ON SOIL SURVEY

Division Head Cites Relation of Work to National Development

BROADCASTS OVER KDKA

Dr. G. E. Condra, director of the conservation and survey division of the University of Nebraska, and president of the American Soil Survey Association, broadcasted over KDKA, Pittsburgh, Pa., last night on "The Relation of the Soil Survey to National Development."

Work on the soil survey association, how the research proceeds, how the reports are made and the aid that is received by the public was dealt with by Dr. Condra.

"Since its inception, the soil survey has made gradual progress in its methods of work, terminology, nomenclature, and system of classification, has gained in efficiency, and has attained a degree of standardization comparable with other technical surveys.

"The survey is well under way, nearing completion in a few states, but there is less progress in some of the commonwealths having large areas of defective soils, probably because of the less apparent need for investigation, but due in part at places to the fact that some of the influential citizens do not want the survey because it would evaluate the relatively unimportant soils as well as those of greater value and therefore, hurt the community and country.

"The soil survey work is done on the county unit plan by well-trained men. It requires two men for the whole of an open season and sometimes longer, to finish a county. All of the land is studied in detail. Many borings are made; numerous soil samples are collected for physical and chemical analysis; detailed maps are made to show the location of soils and of all cultural features; data are gathered on the agricultural utilization of every soil type, and the after a strenuous season of field work, a report on the county is prepared for publication.

"The soil survey reports also have value in special investigations relating to fertilized requirements, flood control, drainage, irrigation, cut-over lands, the management of forest lands, and in the more specialized agricultural industries, like fruit raising, truck farming, and the best sugar industry. No agricultural enterprise of any magnitude, for any special production, as for pecans, cane sugar, coffee, rubber, etc., is now inaugurated anywhere without full consideration of the soil resources obtained by private survey or from public survey, if available."
