The Spasm

Someone the other day wanted to know the purpose of this column. We don't know any more now than when we started, when we stated that the reason was because of time on the hands of the writer and space on the part of The Daily Nebraskan.

We still have the time, and evidently this paper still has the space, because not many contributions have been turned away for lack of space.

These spring mornings it is quite a problem to decide whether to wear a slicker, a top-coat, or go to school in shirt sleeves.

A physical education instructor in the East has suggested that alarm clocks be discarded because they are injurious to the nerves.

The words of the song, "Wear your old hat" seem to have taken root, among college men this rainy weather.

After seeing some students in knickerbockers, we are beginning to believe that long pants are a boom to some men.

Since the "please present bid at door" attitude at spring parties, attendance has dropped off. But it is warmer weather now, and there are other places to go, even if it is only out riding.

Academic life became so boring to twenty-three University of Pennsylvania students that in remedying the situation they put themselves under arrest on a charge of inciting a riot.

All the reserves from the city hall and those from the West Philadelphia police districts were called out to quell the fray.

After about fifteen cars got together on the subject in trying to obey the contradictory traffic lights, the reserves came on the scene and clubbed the students into defeat.

Asked the cause of the disturbance, the students general reply was, "We hadn't any fun for a long time, and we had to do something."
