more stabilized financially, enough advertising to pay for the current issue must be obtained, according to John K. Selleck, secretary of the publication board. Carelessness Causes Trouble. Last semester through carelessness in managing the business side of the Awgwan, only $50 had been collected by May 1 after the third of four issues had been published. Mr. Selleck said. When the semester ended in June little more had been collected and the student activities office, through Mr. Selleck, had to complete these collections during the summer, he declared.

Advertisers showed that statements had not been mailed to them nor had copies of the magazine carrying their advertisement been sent to them, Mr. Selleck declared. Through a prolonged series of letters most of the summer, enough has been collected to pay printing bills. More than $200 in student salaries due has not been paid, according to Mr. Selleck.

From present indications very little more will be turned in to the Awgwan, Mr. Selleck said, so that workers of last semester will not be fully reimbursed for their work on the magazine. Necessity for efficient business management of the Awgwan in the future was stressed by Mr. Selleck after citing the above situation arising from last semester's publication of the magazine.
