BARBS COLLECT ENTERTAINMENT FOR BIG PARTY

Mysterious Rhythmaticians Are Selected to Play By Committee.

DECORATIONS PREVAIL

Chairman Asserts Students Will Have Snowy Time at Holiday Fete.

"Mysterious Rhythmaticians" orchestra, popular ten piece Lincoln dance band, will play for the fourth all-university party of the season, to be held in the coliseum Saturday evening. This orchestra will be masked during the party as well as for all other dances for which it plays this year, prior to an unmasking party.

Plans are well under way for what is expected to be the largest all-university party of the year, according to Alan Williams, party chairman. The party is sponsored by the barb council.

Materials to be used in carrying out the Christmas decorative theme were arriving at the coliseum Tuesday afternoon. More than two miles of decorative paper is on hand, and six times that amount of silver decorating strands. The committee in charge of decorations expects to garb the coliseum more extravagantly than has been done in the past for any university party.

Snow—Maybe. Rumors have been circulating among members of the student body to the effect that some sort of a snow storm will be featured at the all-university party. The barb council has given no information concerning the snow fall plan, but signified its intention of having something along that line.

Special entertainment is being contracted for the party, including Virginia Butler, 8-year-old star, who will impersonate movie stars and present specialty dances. Jimmy Wiley, vaudeville producer, will act as special master of ceremonies during the party.

The participants of the dance were picked from both the senior and junior members of Orchestris.

The cast includes the most unusual group of women who were ever combined in dancing work, and promises to be exceptionally good," stated Beatrice Richardson, dancing instructor of the department of physical education. Lucille Ambrose will play a piano selection at the beginning of the program.

The dance is open to the public, although programs must be presented at the door. The programs may be obtained from members of Orchestris or from Miss Richardson in the gymnasium office.

Van Denbark Writes of Cornhusker Cowboys and Their Provincial Lingo

An article by Melvin Van Denbark, instructor in English at the University of Nebraska, entitled "Nebraska Cow Talk," and dealing with cowboy slang, appeared in the October issue of American Speech.

Although the typical "western novel cowboy" has vanished before the constant encroachment and development in the west, according to the article, much of his lingo still survives. In the language of the cowboy, the owner of the ranch still lives in a "maneh" and the hired hands still sleep in the "dice house" or bunkhouse, and take their meals in the "drug house."

If one was to ask the cowboy how he spent the morning he might reply that he had been at the opera. The surprised look would vanish from the face of the questioner when someone explained to him that the man really meant that he had been sitting on a fence watching one of his pals train horses for riding.

Another ranch hand when asked the same question might reply that he had been "hooking." One well versed in ranch lingo would immediately know that the cowboy had been dehorning cattle. On the ranches there are cowboys who inspect and repair fences watch the cattle and see that they are on good grazing land. In their own language these men are "line riders" who look for "breakers" in fences, "round 'em up," inspect the "dogies" on the range to see how the "feed" is lasting, and "tail 'em down" if necessary. In the old days the ranchers maintained "line camps" for the inspecting cowboys, but now in the days when the inspection tours are made in "buses" instead of on "horses" most owners do not have these camps. If they do, they usually refer to them as "Jones' Place."

If the horse was seen running fast the cowboy would declare that he was "foggin," goin' like sandhairs are after 'im or "draggin' 'is navel in the sand."

Many Spanish words are heard in the Nebraska ranching country. "Adios" is sometimes used for "goodbye," "savvy" for "understand," "yomoose" for "get out, and occasionally "cache" from the French is used for "hide."

HOWELL CHOOSES SUPPORTING CAST FOR PRODUCTION

Many Fine Arts Students Will Get Chance in Next Offering.

CHARACTERIZES ENGLISH

'Lady Windermere's Fan' Is Chosen to Open at Temple Friday.

An unusually large and well selected supporting cast has been chosen to assist Herbert Yenne, Betty Craft, Walter Vogt, and Cornelia Ayers, who take the leading roles in Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan," which will be presented by the University Players at the Temple Friday evening for the first time, according to Miss H. Alice Howell, director.

It is composed of Edwin Quinn as Parker, Katharyn Ruegge as the Duchess of Berwick, Faye Williams as Lady Agatha, Richard Page as Mr. Dumbly, George Holt as Mr. Hopper, Prudence Brown as Lady Plymdale, Mildred Orr as Lady Stutfield, Jere Mickle as Cecil Graham, Maurine Drayton as Lady Jedburgh, Helen Manning as Mrs. Cowper-Cowper, W. Zolley Lerner as Lord Augustus, Max Jones as Guy Berkeley, Al Tiffany as Arthur Bowden, Paul Thompson as Lord Paisley, Valerie Worell as Rosalie, Pauline Gellaly as Miss Graham, Katherine Gallagher as Mrs. Arthur Bowden, and Lois Granstaff as Lady Paisley.

Large Cast Chosen. Heaviest parts in the play are those of Lady Windermere, taken by Betty Craft, Lord Windermere, taken by Herbert Yenne, Lord Darlington, taken by Walter Vogt, and Mrs. Erylene, taken by Cornelia Ayers. The supplementary cast, however, supplies the background and much of the humor. "Lady Windermere's Fan" contains the largest number of actors and actresses used in any play given so far this season. Yenne, Mr. Lerner and Miss Gellaly are well known not only for work in former productions but also for their connection with the dramatic department.

The play deals with the artificial and frivolous life of lords and ladies in English society. The women spend all their time trying to attract the attention of other women's husbands or marrying off their daughters. Anyway the pursuit of man is their one and only thought. The men never seem to do anything except play cards, and make love.

NEBRASKA FARMERS SEND MOST PEOPLE

Largest Percent Students Claim Agriculture as Fathers' Job.

Twenty-four percent of the 6,535 students enrolled in the University of Nebraska this year come from Nebraska farms, a recent survey made by the registrar shows. When answering the registration query, "Occupation of Parent," early in the fall, this proportion of students answered "agriculture," proving that Nebraska farms contribute the largest single bloc of students.

Next to agriculture as an occupation of parents of the Nebraska students, "merchants" ranked second with 15.1-2 percent rating, and "professional men" was third with a score of 12 percent.

Few Retired. Eleven percent of the students gave the parent's occupation in the "trade" classification, 6 percent of the fathers of Nebraska students were agents or engaged in office work, 5 percent in banking or the insurance business, 5 percent in manufacturing or railroading, 3 percent retired, 2 percent were in the government service and 1 percent were laborers.

Fourteen percent of the students entered "deceased" or failed to fill out the registration card. One and one-half percent were nurses.

The total number of students giving agriculture as the occupation of the parent was 1,586. In the professional classification, sons and daughters of doctors were the largest in the group with 242. Teachers ranked second with 175, and 119 students classified their father as a minister. Lawyers, engineers and faculty members ranked in order named.

Miss Mildred Olson, is general chairman in charge of the arrangements. Strong Relates Discoveries in Indian Lands Which Validate Old Civilization

Dr. W. D. Strong, professor of anthropology at Nebraska, reports having an interesting tour along the banks of the Republican river and through the western part of the state. Visits were made at different museums in the state for the purpose of obtaining suggestions and information. The museum at Hastings especially proved complete and helpful, according to Dr. Strong.

A number of discoveries were made from the examination of the Republican banks. Many evidences were found pointing to the fact that this territory was occupied by Indians at an early date who were engaged in agriculture. Most of this evidence was in the shape of old house pits in the low hills back from the river and in the high hills beyond the village. Many sites were located along the river showing that the Indians farmed only the more fertile soil along the river.

Used Same Fields. To all intent, these Indians planted the same fields in corn that farmers are planting in corn at the present day. This accounts for the number of flint agricultural tools that are being plowed up by farmers at the present time.

"Due to lack of time, we were not permitted to make an extensive survey," Dr. Strong stated. "We were in high hopes of finding other sites of an earlier hunting people. In all probability, the earlier tribe lived along the creek beds in the older lands."

In addition to this, they found evidence in the way of bones of a later people. These tribes engaged largely in hunting and, by means of horses like the ones used at the present day, they chased wild buffalo and other wild game. These people were much more closely related to the people of the present day.

Find Mastodon Bones. One of the important finds of the trip was that of a large mastodon, Dr. Strong stated. Its immensity of size can be judged from the fact that it had tusks that measured eight feet long. A number of surface specimens of "lint work and pottery were found."

The tour was made entirely in the interest of anthropology and was done primarily to act as an aid in the preparation of the next summer's work. This work is planned to be held along the Platte and the Republican river districts.

Tickets for the annual Cornhusker football banquet which will be held Dec. 13, in the Venetian room of the Lincoln hotel in honor of Nebraska's Big Six champion football team, are practically all sold, according to an announcement by Jack Elliott, of the Innocents society yesterday. A few tickets may still be obtained at Latach brothers company and from members of the Innocents. It is expected by those in charge that all of the tickets will be sold by Wednesday night. Only 350 tickets were put on sale.

Although 900 attended the banquet last year when it was held in the coliseum, owing to the limited accommodations of the hotel banquet room only 350 will attend this year. The coliseum is not being used this year because it was deemed to be unsuitable for banquets.

Who's Captain Now? The feature of the evening will be the announcement of the captain of the 1930 Cornhusker football team. According to precedent Captain George Farley will hand the football to the newly elected captain.

The committee in charge is making elaborate plans for the decorations. The room will be decorated with large pennants of each of the schools in the Big Six conference, and at the back of the table where the football men will be seated will be a 16 foot electrically lighted "N." The twenty-six letter men of the 1929 football squad will be guests at the banquet. The speakers have not yet been announced.

CHAIRMAN EULOGIZES IDEALS AT VESPERS

Wendell Groth Describes Religious Activities Regarding Life.

"Student movements supply the need of a place to work out ideals and apply them to life," stated Wendell Groth, chairman of the National Council of Student associations, in his talk at Vespers Tuesday evening.

"All religious activity is grouped around the love of God and the love of neighbors. Students are here in college to learn how to live life most abundantly and the value of life is not in what you believe, but in what you do. Student movements, such as the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are the place to test life's values."

"They supply the need of some place to work out ideals and apply them, and there are many more places to apply these ideals. Industrial groups and missionary work offer the chance to put these actively into practice. In the student movements there are not hindrances to developing such ideas."

Evelyn Adler led the meeting. Special music was a vocal solo given by Gwendolyn West.

WEBER INVITED TO SPEAK AT PENDER
