DEAN THOMPSON GIVES VIEWS ON LIQUOR QUESTION

Opposes Modification of Existing Laws for Enforcement.

CITES MANY EXAMPLES Student Affairs Head Gives Proof Drinking Has Been Lessened.

At the request of The Daily Nebraskan, Dean T. J. Thompson prepared a written statement Thursday of his views on the prohibition question as a national issue. His attitude corresponds to a great degree with those expressed by Coaches Bible and Schulte in interviews recently.

Many national figures are testifying at the present time before the judiciary committee of the United States senate. At the same time The Literary Digest is conducting a nationwide unofficial poll in which those who disfavor prohibition are winning. Dean Thompson does not favor any modification of the present liquor enforcement laws. He also voices the opinion of favoring national enforcement in addition to state enforcement because he believes that is the only way it can become effective.

Text is given.

The entire text of his statement follows: It has been my pleasure to reside in six different states and in all save one, Kansas, liquor was sold over the saloon bar. I lived in New York, South Dakota, Michigan, and Nebraska before going to Kansas, which has been a prohibition state for thirty-five years, and was greatly impressed by the difference in the amount of liquor consumed in that state. In fact, during the four years I spent in Kansas, I never saw a person under the influence of liquor; and while I was there a number of persons of about twenty-five years of age told me they had never seen an intoxicated person.

New York Enforcement Better. For six years I lived in New York state, which at that time was in the regime of local option. While I am an advocate of state rights and believe in the fullest possible play of personal rights, I know that it was a continuous and bitter fight for the dry townships, counties, villages, and countryside to maintain a semblance of control over the liquor situation. Persons living in these same areas today tell me that the situation is much better than it was under local option.

I lived in Chicago before the advent of prohibition and have been there many times since, and if I can rely upon my observations I must conclude that the use of liquor in Chicago is much less now than in the preprohibition days; at least, it is apparent. "Keely Cure" Common. In my early boyhood I lived in South Dakota where there were saloons. It was a common thing to have certain of our neighbors pointed out as having taken the "Keely cure" or as being away taking this cure for habitual alcoholism. In the past ten years I have not heard of a single individual taking this cure. In fact, (Continued on Page 4.)

Lady Spring Gets Chilly Reception; Advent Is Heralded

"Ho! The springtime!" Shout it joyfully with the poet even though your chattering teeth spoil the effect! Shout it loudly even while you wrap your winter coat about you against the biting wind! The mercury stood at 20 degrees this morning and will not mount higher than 40 or 45 degrees by afternoon but—spring is here!

All romantic spirits, moreover, should have kept vigil last night to properly herald the official coming of spring at exactly 2:30 a. m. For do we not have watch parties in honor of the New Year? And the New Year is only an immature child who exacts tiresome resolutions while spring is a gracious lady who bestows such gratifying privileges.

The poor, overworked student may now rightfully have an attack of spring fever and slight his assignments. "A young man's fancy" may roam as it will. Coeds may, with just cause, write home a touching plea for funds for a new spring outfit. If the plea fails to touch the paternal pocketbook to a sufficient extent, moth balls may be shaken from the folds of last year's models. The ambitious scholar may cut down his consumption of kilowatts since Spring has given day an "even break" with the night. Ho! For the springtime!

Stage Men Get Nervous as Operatic Stars in Moving About With 'Carmen'

BY REX WAGNER. The literal antithesis of the figurative expression of "raising the roof" on joyous occasions actually took place in the Coliseum, when the floor was raised five feet in order to improve the building as a theater. Carpenters commenced working Monday to raise the floor and completed the job about 9 o'clock Thursday. Nineteen thousand square feet of lumber were used in the construction. The floor was raised much more this year than last, according to Gregg McBride. The capacity of the Coliseum was increased to 5,000 in the balconies and 2,000 on the main floor. Mr. McBride stated that the capacity of building was not yet fully utilized.

FULLBROOK APPROVES LARGE CONCERN JOBS

'Chain Store Connection Is Valuable,' Says Bizad Professor.

Four men, on the average, visit the campus weekly as representatives of large corporations, according to E. S. Fullbrook of the college of business administration. It is the duty of these men to interview students who are to graduate this spring and try to interest these graduates in employment with the company they represent.

"As a rule these men approve only a very few men from any one school and in reality the number of men finally entering the employment of any organization from any school is very small," Professor Fullbrook said.

A connection with any large corporation such as the chain stores, the rubber companies or any of the many others whose agents come to this campus yearly, is a valuable one, according to Professor Fullbrook.

PROFESSORS AGREE HECKLERS ARE RARE

Three Faculty Members Say This Type Is Unusual.

Heckling students who stall for time, attempt to "catch the instructor" on something, or try to show their own superior knowledge by unnecessary questions are rare, is the general consensus among the instructors at the University of Nebraska.

"I meet both of these types in my classes, occasionally, but they are unusual and can usually be discouraged," said Dr. Hattie Plum Williams, head of the sociology department. Mrs. Williams believes that the majority of questions that are asked spring from an honest desire to obtain knowledge. "I think that not enough, rather than too many, questions are asked," she added.

Such Students Are Rare. "These students are comparatively rare and are usually squelched by the attitude of the class," is the opinion of George M. Darlington, instructor in economics. Mr. Darlington says that he encourages questions and that his greatest difficulty is not with students who ask too many questions, but with those who aren't interested enough to care to ask questions.

There will be no change pertaining to books going out on reserve over the week end. Books taken out on Saturday will be due the following Monday, according to library regulations.

Sunday Study Room Needed. The decision to have Sunday library hours follows immediately upon an editorial in yesterday's Daily Nebraskan. The need of a quiet place in which to study on Sundays as well as the advantages of opening the library for cultural pursuits in the way of outside reading were pointed out.

The matter of opening the libraries on Sunday was recommended to the regents by Chancellor Gilbert Doane and Dean of Student Affairs T. J. Thompson on the advisability of Sunday afternoon library hours, and with the approval of the idea, proposed the plan to the regents.
