

SOCIAL WORKERS TO MEET HERE JULY 28

Prof. Frank J. Bruno Is in Charge of Institute For Fourth Time.

The Institute for Social Workers under the direction of Professor Frank J. Bruno of Washington University is being held this year from July 28 to Aug. 8. The institute is primarily for those who are actively interested in the field, either from the standpoint of volunteer service, board members of social service organizations, members of other professions who desire to know something of the case work method, or the paid and trained social worker.

It is also open to selected sociology majors who will find the course valuable in orienting themselves in the field of social case work. The course is sponsored by the university extension division as a part of the regular summer school session.

This is Professor Bruno's fourth visit to the University of Nebraska campus, he having conducted the institute each summer since 1927. He is one of the outstanding teachers of social case work of the day, and is prepared to bring to the members of the institute the newest developments in the field.

The subject matter of the course will be family case work, the basic method behind all modern scientific effort with defectives, delinquents, dependents and the otherwise unadjusted.

The institute is limited to the first twenty-five people who make application to the extension division.

the situation. And today the registration is just about that much over last year's at the corresponding time.

Popularity of the nine weeks session, stressed by the university, the usual large proportion of teachers attending summer school, and the unusually large number taking a full nine hours of work are shown in early registration figures issued by R. D. Moritz, director of the summer session.

Two and one-half times as many persons are going to summer school the full nine weeks as the six weeks term. Less than 100 are taking short courses, though this number will increase with the new short courses, three of which began Monday.

One out of every two students in summer school is in the teachers college. Its total of 1,142 is practically half of the total enrollment of 2,307. Counting in fine arts students in the teachers college, the number is more than half.

While the college of arts and sciences at present is second with 356 students, it probably will be eclipsed in enrollment by the graduate college as registrations there are not yet completed. At present 325 are taking advanced work.

Six hours and nine hours are the two most popular scholastic loads for the summer, with the nine-hour schedules first.
