CORNWALL AND OHIO FALL INTO LINE.

Hundreds of the two largest independent colleges, Cornell and Ohio State, affirmed their support of the American Legion's policy last week, as a result of the nationwide Legion drive to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, in which both institutions are deeply interested.

The legislation, which would have the effect of denying financial aid to students who are members of organizations which are in sympathy with the principles of communism, was defeated in the Wisconsin legislature.

The vote was 50 to 30, with the college 0, 0, 7, and 1 for the university. The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.

The legislation was introduced by the American Legion, which has been active in Wisconsin for several years, in an effort to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, which was established in 1848.

The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.

The legislation was introduced by the American Legion, which has been active in Wisconsin for several years, in an effort to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, which was established in 1848.

The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.

The legislation was introduced by the American Legion, which has been active in Wisconsin for several years, in an effort to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, which was established in 1848.

The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.

The legislation was introduced by the American Legion, which has been active in Wisconsin for several years, in an effort to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, which was established in 1848.

The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.

The legislation was introduced by the American Legion, which has been active in Wisconsin for several years, in an effort to secure the withdrawal of all students from the University of Wisconsin, which was established in 1848.

The university's refusal to accept the principle of the legislation was made over the objections of the state's most prominent educators.