A Student Body.

FOR 1,269 students, classes in the six weeks session are held for the last time today. For 754, school work for the summer is over.

Six weeks is such a brief period that it allows little time for becoming acquainted with faculty members, students and the University of Nebraska. Yet more has been accomplished along that line this season than in past years.

A common opinion among those who have attended past summer sessions at the university has been that summer attendance did not really entitle them to "belong" to the student body of the university. There were no organizations, no organized activities, no general social functions, little opportunity for them to meet students other than those with whom they were associated in the classrooms.

Much has been done this summer to dispel this notion. The selection of a student executive committee has enabled students to plan parties and picnics when and as they wish. With the co-operation of the dramatic department a three-act comedy was given, providing summer students with an excellent entertainment as any staged during the winter term. The Summer Nebraskan, in its second year of existence, has attempted to keep students informed as to all summer activities. As to educational advantages, the securing of a group of visiting professors recognized as leaders in their respective fields in addition to a good selection from the regular faculty presents opportunities for study which are second to no other term during the year.

What has been attempted this summer will be continued next year. Each year finds many teachers who return to find their circle of acquaintanceships a little larger—and their appreciation of the summer session a little greater. And they discover that they are as much a part of the student body as those who attend during the winter.

For time is not the decisive element in determining who shall be members of a university student body. Some attend a single summer session and catch a glimpse of the ideals of the school and the individual effort necessary to bring the realization of such aspirations. Others spend months—and even years—grabbing what is being offered by the state without a thought as to individual responsibility.

STUDENT OPINION

To the Editor:

I hear many complaints from friends and acquaintances in summer school to the effect that English is a painful subject to study or teach. If English is a subject painful alike to study and to teach, this is because the language now is, and always has been, misrepresented in school textbooks. As taught the subject imparts not the least implication that English is a high specialized, individualized, and simplified language—the most adaptable and the most logically constructed of all. Compared to it, I believe that Latin and Greek are almost barbarous tongues. The beauty of English lies hidden under a dead weight of terms which have no meaning and rules and definitions taken from Greek and Latin grammar. English should be freed from these foreign entanglements if our students are to ever get any understanding of their own language.

Bancroft School Inaugurates Speech Clinic to Correct Twists of Tongue

"I am most delighted with the results obtained in our clinics," stated Miss Maude Rousseau, principal of Bancroft school this summer, in speaking of the reading and speech correction clinics conducted there during the summer session.

In each of these laboratories the particular difficulty of the child is discovered and diagnosed; then a remedy is advised and applied.

Miss Bessie Rasmus, instructor of speech pathology at Iowa university, is in charge of the speech correction clinic. The first hour her university students actually meet and work with the children who have speech defects. The second hour is given over to theory, method, and practical questions.

"After the sound has been taught as a single sound, the training is individual," explained Miss Rasmus. "Drills are so worked out

Isabel Rainey, freshman in Teachers college who will teach at Springfield; Joe Edward Hartford, sophomore in engineering college; Elmer Edward Johnson, junior in Teachers college; Gerald A. Of the five students from Brown county, seven are form Ainsworth. Elmer E. Holm of Ainsworth, who is taking graduate work and will return to his home town to teach this winter, is the only man registered from the county. Dorothy G. Browne is a junior in arts and sciences college. Lila Elizabeth McAndrew, senior; Alice W. Morrow, as to meet the life situation of the child in order that the correct sound will carry over into the child's spontaneous speech."

There are fifteen student teachers each with two assistants taking the course in remedial reading and working in the clinic under the supervision of Miss Mildred M. Miller, elementary supervisor, Cleveland Heights, O.

The instructor smiled as she explained that this arrangement was necessary since they had more teachers than children. "We have ninety-two enrolled and had not anticipated that the course would be so popular."

Each teacher works with an individual child. After many diagnostic measures have been applied, corrective work is begun.

Miss Miller also teaches a course in social studies and one in curriculum essentials in primary grades.

sophomore, and Martha Rose Morrow, freshman, are taking work in Teachers college. All four will teach in Ainsworth this year. Lyda Martha Rogers, a freshman in Teachers college, will be at Mitchell. Virginia Ann Shrimpton is a senior in the school of fine arts.

Audrey Marie Cameron and Wilma Gladys Griffith are form Johnston. Audrey Cameron is a sophomore in Teachers college and Wilma Griffith, a freshman in the Brown county.

Helen Alvina Flyer is the only student from Lone Pine. She is taking first year work in Teachers college and will teach in Johnston.

Of the nineteen students from Buffalo county, only three are from Kearney are taking work at the university this summer. Gladys Shaddock Haskins, who will teach in Buffalo county this year, is taking third year work in Teachers college. Allen Griffith Anderson and Carl Lorenzo Cox, who will teach in Quinten, Kas., are in the graduate college.

THE LIBRARY

"Summer students are older than those of former sessions, and the men outnumber the women," remarked Miss Craig, reference librarian. "This can be accounted for by the fact that a greater number than usual are working toward the higher degrees. Since the summer students are more mature, they require less help in their reference work."

Mr. Doane, librarian, will leave Saturday, July 18, to join Mrs. Doane who is now in Newport, R. I. Later they will go to Vermont, where they will spend some time.

Miss Gertrude Robson, head cataloger of the library, is now enjoying a vacation in New England.

Mrs. Consuello S. Graham, assistant reference librarian, is taking a month's vacation. She will remain in the city.

The 1930 census volumes are arriving at the library and are available for use. Very few summer students take advantage of the Sunday hours at the library. This is probably due to the fact that many take advantage of the fine weather conditions, and drive home for the week end.
