

SOCIAL DELEGATES
DISCUSS PROBLEMS OF LOCAL ACTIVITY

passed at the recent legislature, resides in Oakland.

Institute workers are studying the various methods of arousing interest in community social problems. Particular attention is being given to such means as local discussion meetings, club projects, lectures, exhibits, demonstrations, programs, and news letters. Comment has been made upon the value of state-wide programs such as the one being carried on at the conference.

"We are particularly emphasize-ing," Miss Johnson pointed out, "that all the elements in the community should participate in the program, but that the direction of these activities should come from members of a central committee, made up of representatives of all factions, organizations and fraternal groups."

"Especially should it be pointed out that this is not a 'woman's' movement. It is a community movement, to be carried on by active workers in men's community clubs and other male groups and individuals as well."

The institute meetings bring out that the new social program for Nebraska is not a condescending movement. It is not a plan whereby the rich serve the poor, or the country club members stoop to help the poorer neighbors across the tracks. Instead it is shown as a strictly cooperative plan. One where aid is given to those who need it without the lines of class distinction or differentiation between the privileged and unprivileged.

There is no thought of attempting to withdraw assistance from those who may not appear to deserve it. It is a plan to make communities attain a social balance with the solution of problem-family cases through understanding social aid and advice. At all times it is understood that social agencies shall realize that they have three sources of advice and instruction for their work—the state department of public welfare, the state conference for social workers and the university.

Louis Unick, the only representative from Pleasanton, is a junior in arts and sciences.

Joseph C. Brown is the only student from Decatur. He is enrolled in the graduate college.
