Honor Among Students

For half a year students and faculty at the University of Washington have quibbled over the problem of students cheating in examinations.

A large number of selected students were secured last spring and asked to observe the cheating during examinations and make a report thereon.

- 1. Cheating increased directly with the size of classes.
2. There was more cheating in true-false examinations than in the blue books.
3. Practically the same amount of cheating was found to exist in detailed as in general examinations.

As a result of these findings the committee made the following recommendations:
1. The instructor should be in the room at all times during the progress of the examination.

These recommendations come from a faculty committee and are the result of half a year's study. The honor system and student cheating problem has been discussed on this campus before.

The above recommendations made by the Washington committee are alright, and they may serve to give a clearer light on the subject, but they are not going to lessen the student's desire to cheat.

Announcement was made in the last two successive issues of the Daily Nebraskan of the achievement of College of Agriculture students at the American Royal Livestock show at Kansas City.

Too little recognition of achievement made by individuals or groups connected with the college of agriculture is granted by fellow members of the same university if not enrolled in courses taught on the same campus. There has been existing too long a marked breach between students of the agriculture and down town campuses.

We are all ostensibly, ideally, and actually fellow members of the same society—that which functions within the walls of "Universitas Nebraskensis."

The success of any society is dependent upon the strength and co-operation prevalent among members. All students, be they preparing themselves for intensive farming according to new and improved methods which will make for increased production and better economic conditions.

A sophomore at Washington university was presented with a $10 razor for having the best beard as a result of a several weeks growing season.

MORNING MAIL

Saved by the Bell. TO THE EDITOR: I have always understood that when a bell rang at the end of a class period, that class was supposed to be dismissed.

Now that the Military ball is approaching, it seems that it would be in order to advance a suggestion concerning the length of the affair. The parties at this so-called institution have always been ended at 11:30 so that the co-eddy can get the co-eds in by 12:30.

At the beginning of each semester, students are forced to pay out to the various book concerns, thousands of dollars for new books.

It seems that each year the publishers must put out a new edition of all their books, so as to make them up-to-date in every way.

It has been admitted that the publishers must resort to such a practice, to be able to make money. They are in their business for that.

Just what can be done about this practice is problematic, but with the school authorities crying, economize, the papers writing economize, and the parents of these students warning, economize, something should be done by the university to save these thousands of dollars for the students.

no gain. Brown came around from a close position behind the line, hit off the Iowa State right guard and ran 80 yards for a touchdown.

Iowa State chose to kick after the score and Nebraska started right back down the field.

Late in the second quarter, Masterson and Manley worked the ball down to the Iowa State 14-yard line.

In the fourth quarter, with the wind at their backs, the Huskers again started their powerful offensive drives.

Both teams battled back and forth in the third period with no serious scoring attempts.

Paul ran the Iowa left end for nine yards. Penny made a first down on the Iowa State 14-yard line.
