and students cannot be Gramlich Accompanies Team blamed for cheating if the instructors put temptation in their path was one of the facts brought out in interviews with members of the university faculty yesterday concerning the honor system of examinations as it operates elsewhere and its possibilities here.

"Under the present system, o giving examinations, I think that it is the duty of the instructor to provide examinations that will make it practically impossible to cheat as this is the only way of protecting those students who do not care to be dishonest," Dr. A. F. Jenness, associate professor in the psychology department, stated. W. E. Walton, another member of the psychology department, contended that it makes little difference if the students are gov erned by an honor system or not "A man is always on his honor The system works out with students who wouldn't cheat anyway and those who are accustomed to cheating continue to do so."

Don't Want Responsibility.

"Students themselves do not want the responsibility of the honor system settled upon their shoulders, they would rather have it elsewhere. The system worked well at John Hopkins but circumstances and conditions were different there because the majority of judging some classes of Hereford the students were taking graduate work," was the answer of H. W. Stoke, of the political science department who attended a school where the honor system was in

The psychological effect and influence of the system, and the way it works out in most instances, was discussed by the members of the psychology department.

The desire to make a good grade would be stronger than the desire to ease the conscience. This desire is in reality the craving to make a good impression on every-body. Until the majority of the group will demonstrate in regular exams that they can be trusted it isn't advisable to use the honor system in examinations," was the further opinion of Mr. Walton. Ideal Is Desirable.

The honor system is an ideal that is desirable, according to Dr. Jenness, but students have not advanced to the point where it is best aminations."

Prosperity Born in Ag College Sheep Barns as Winter Blizzard Snow Flies

Prosperity is not just around the orner out on the college of agriulture campus. Instead it culture campus. Instead it arrived day. Economists have en predicting the return of prosperity for many months and their prediction has been fulfilled. Everybody is happy now. Old man Depression has left.

But this prosperity is different than many millions of people have been looking forward to for over year. Instead it comes in the form of a newborn pure bred Southdown lamb, born at the college this week amid a real bliz-

Prof. H. J. Gramlich, head of the animal husbandry department, re-ceives the credit for naming the new lamb "Prosperity." At first he didn't know what to call the young animal Then he thought of "Optimism" but that didn't seem right. Then he hit upon the idea of "Prosperity." Incidentally that term in this case refers to a lamb of the male order for he is a ram. Given Babe's Care.

During the overturn the shrinking newspaper people, high above the stage, were entertained by a harmonica solo by the electrician. He did quite well but did not play the same piece that the orchestra did. Later in the evening the elec-trician stated that there were fifty light changes and some sixteen scene changes. One of the scenes in a cabaret is a modernistic design but with a change of lights becomes a cottage window.

There are only two curtains during the whole show the rest of the scenes being changed by blackouts, which in stage parlance mean the slow dying out of the lights to complete darkness.

This is one of the secrets. Herb Yenne is not the Paderewski he seems to be-somebody behind the scenes plays that swell music. Herb, when his turn comes to play, goes over to the piano, the keyboard of which is hidden from couple of chords. Then the unseen the audience, and bangs out a pianist, a lady, picks up the chords and beats out a melody. Not many people in the audience know this.

Herb does dance, tho, despite the fact that he is harrassed constantly during the play by dancing teachers who want him to become a good dancer. You really should see him at a party.

During the pantomime when

ecuting her dance Bod Reade was busily putting up more scenery. Erecting a lamp post required nailing and so Bob solved the difficulty by pounding the hammer in time to the music out front. At about the same time Zolley Lerner and some others were busily, if not gracefully, engaged in another dance behind the scene. It appeared to the reporters to be a very free interpretation of Fannie Brice's interpretation of Pavpan has chosen the psychological pan has chosen the psychological of the dying swan. care comparable to that given a newborn babe. All the luxuries are at the feet of the young animal. When he is first born, he is taken to a warm place to protect him from the cold weather. Imagine a coed standing out in a driving snowstorm waiting for her boy friend to meet her when the temperature ranges around 21 degrees below zero. It just isn't done, No girl would think of it. But regardless lambs seem to be able to stand the cold quite well. In fact two years ago today six-teen lambs were born on the campus when the thermometer ranged about that degree of coldness. The amezing thing about it is that not a lamb was lost.

No doubt "Prosperity" will receive the best of care. He is to be shown next fall as a fat wether at livestock shows. With his coming into the world it may be possible

Given Babe's Care. that prosperity is just around the University of Nebraska students corner. But what a corner! there go up and cannot be heard in Zolley Lerner and Don Crowe were more fun than two shows. Don seemed to be set upon enter-taining himself at all costs and did a good job of answering everyone behind the stage. Zolley's laugh is worth two of any one else's. He seemed to get more kick out of the show than anyone even the audience out front. His infectious giggle got many a laugh back-
