Campus politics is again a sub-ject of major importance with the Student council announcement that second semester filings for elective positions must be made by Friday afternoon. Another political plum which is ready to pick is the slate of offices which will be chosen at the Interfraternity council meeting

Watch Faction Threat.

With reference to the second semester election, which will be held just one week from today at the Temple polls, there is a matter for speculation. The chief issue is whether Yellow Jackets and Barbs will back-track from their stand of last fall when they declared class offices useless and declined to present slates. Consequently the Blue Shirts took the election without competition and Russell Mou-sel, Beta Theta Pi, Hastings; Phillip Brownell, Delta Upsilon, Lin-coln; George Sauer, Delta Tau (Continued on Page 2.)

'Readers' Find No More Velvet In Their Jobs

There is no more velvet for "readers" in the University of Ne-braska. Old man depression came along and took a considerable chunk out of the university appro-priations and consequently all readers and assistants have ex-perienced a shrinking of the pay-check.

It scarcely pays to have the job now—since the profit isn't enough to buy spectacles—and the work and composition of the papers is such that they are necessary.

The trimming of expenses has taken three distinct forms. Either the professor has to correct some the professor has to correct some of the papers himself, or he has to or the papers himself, or he has to have less papers corrected, or the readers have to do the same amount of work with less remuneration. In any case the process is painful and does not put many pennies into the pockets of the poor but intellectual.

In fact, the only decent way the 'Othello' Wins Praise as February Production Opens Monday.

HART JENKS IS LAUDED

Guest Artist, Cast in Title Role, Acclaimed Star On First Night.

Shakespeare's "Othello," current production of the University Players, received the general acclaim of a capacity house as it opened a week's run in the Temple theater Monday night. Cast in the title role was Hart

Jenks, former member of the dra-matics department faculty who has been playing Shakespeare with the Walter Hampden company on Broadway. Those who saw Mr. Jenks in "Hamlet," given by the players in the spring of 1930, praised his last night's perform-ance as his best in Lincoln.

Approval given the production on its first night promised a popu-lar run for the Players' February production. Other characters in the tragedy were mostly experienced actors with the Players. Their interpretation of their roles, along with the stellar performance of Mr. Jenks, bears out professional opinion that "Othello," as well as being one of Shakespeare's most tremendous pieces, is one of his most presentable.

Desdemona, the wife of the jeal-ous Moor, was admirably played by Mary Kay Throop. Her inter-pretation of a difficult part added to the effectiveness of the entire drama

WOOD DISCUSSES USE OF TESTS IN COLLEGE

Columbia Professor Talks on Intelligence Exams for Students.

GIVES RESULT OBTAINED

College students do not show decided gain in their four years at college, according to Dr. Ben Wood, director of the bureau of collegiate educational research, Columbia university, who addressed the faculty at 4 o'clock, Monday afternoon in the basement auditorium of Morrill hall.

Speaking on the "College Test-ing Program," Dr. Wood declared that the results of tests given to the four classes at Columbia showed that the students had made no decided gain in any of the subjects over which they were examined. The subjects which were used as the basis of the examinations were English, mathematics, foreign languages, social sciences, and natural sciences.

Dr. Wood however, proposes the new kind of intelligence test which uses objective answers of yes or no, plus or minus sign in preference to the ones used which are subjective, and which require a paragraph or two in answer to a simple question. The tests cover a wide variation and range of subjects, presenting to the student a number of questions covering many fields of subjects. The tests cover a period of fifteen hours, which is given to the student in five three-hour sessions during five half days. The same test given to the four different classes showed approximately uniform mental ability, but most of the subjects such as Eng-lish, Mathematics, and General culture subjects showed a decrease

One of the causes of this deficiency in the intelligence test method is due perhaps to the fact that the student works each semester for credit rather than for the content of the course itself. Many of the courses are required for a degree and are not especially a preference of the student, so he takes the course, cramming for the exam, and dismisses the material offered in the course from his requirements. BAND PLAYS CONCERT IN COLISEUM SUNDAY
