be. I do not believe in parents selecting the work their children are to do. Instead, give them the benefit of your advice and experience, and let the boy or girl decide on his or her profession.

"That's the way I did with my own daughter. If I had insisted on her following my judgment, she would not have taken up the line she did, but I did not attempt to force my own judgment. I let her decide for herself."

Although parents may often wish that their children follow a certain field of concentration, the logical reasoning is that the boy or girl would be more likely to succeed in the field that they would choose, according to Dr. Sealock. It is reasonable to assume, he believes, that a person will do better in the work that most widely appeals to him.

NEXT AWGWAN ISSUE RELEASE DATE SET

Humor Magazine Copy for February Number Must Be Brought In.

Announcement of the tentative date for the next issue of the Awgwan was made yesterday afternoon by Marvin Robinson, editor.

The engineer, he believes, has created a number of things which have revolutionized society but which people do not know how to use properly.

The cover for this number of the Awgwan, drawn by Norman Hansen, features the Valentine's day motif, and follows the general trend in modern college humor publications covers.

"Numerous changes in the form of the magazine have been made in this issue to give a more artistic appearance to each page," declared Robinson. "Initial letters have been introduced to the body of the magazine and space between jokes and features as well as the margins of the pages have been altered."

Contributions Still Acceptable. Robinson pointed out that although the magazine will be published in just a little more than a week there is still a little time open for contributions.

Plans Announced for All-University Party. Marrow's Revue Secured for Special Valentine Stage Show.

Book Negro Orchestra. The fourth all-university party scheduled for Saturday night will have Valentine decorations for its motif, according to plans released yesterday by George Thomas, Arts and Science senior from Nebraska City in charge of publicity for the party.

The feature attraction of the Saturday affair will be the unusual Valentine stage show starring Marrow's revue, Thomas said. Simple Simon's Coo Coo's, a negro band, has been booked to play for the party.

Decorations of red and white paper strung above the floor of the Coliseum will lend a festive atmosphere, preliminary plans indicated. Alternate red and white hearts of thin paper will be placed over the large strips in an attempt to create a two-tone color effect.

Although complete plans are not yet available according to Thomas, additional information on arrangements for the affair will be ready within a few days.

DEAN FERGUSON SEES MANY OPPORTUNITIES

Engineering College Head Cites Chances for Investments.

SAYS NEED FOR REVISION. "I have no list of openings into salaried positions; no calls for workers," writes Dean O. J. Ferguson, dean of the engineering college, in the latest issue of the Nebraska Blue Print.

The dean cites the unusual advantages to be gained at the present time, by those fortunate enough to have ready cash, in the purchase of high grade stocks and bonds at prices lower than their actual worth as one opportunity.

He emphasizes more particularly, however, opportunities that young men at the present time have to develop and fit themselves "for the greater work with the coming of the new order of things, with and even in the solving of the intricate problems that impede our present progress."

Indicating that those who take advantage of these opportunities to improve themselves will be the leaders of the new order of things, Dean Ferguson declares that "we need a revision of the details of our moral, social, and economic order to fit modern production and modern interdependence."

The engineer, he believes, has created a number of things which have revolutionized society but which people do not know how to use properly.

J. D. Epp Tries to Help Students Secure Employment; Finds Jobs Are More Scarce Than Usual This Year

That opportunities for employment of students by Lincoln firms have by comparison with former years decreased in number is the opinion of J. D. Epp, assistant to the dean of student affairs, who maintains the university service to help students secure employment.

The employment service, which was formerly handled through the university Y. M. C. A. in the Temple building, has been established in the office of the dean of student affairs since the fall of 1929.

To avail themselves of the help of this service, students register and file applications which are kept on file by the office.

The lack of jobs available to students has affected the registration at the university to a slight degree, Mr. Epp thinks. However, it would be very difficult to secure definite figures regarding this matter because of the great number of students doing part time work and because of the fact that jobs are lost and new ones created so often.

Bank Failures Serious. Upon one occasion a student came to school with a check upon a bank for enough money to pay his expenses for quite some time.

In some cases students' savings accounts have been wiped out by the failure of a bank. But it is difficult to determine just how the local situation affects students, according to Mr. Epp, because of the extensive nature of the present financial situation.

Due to the fact that Nebraska is principally an agricultural state, the present low prices of farm products, particularly livestock, has also had some effect, Mr. Epp believes.

At the present time approximately 150 students are registered in the bureau. Many of these already have jobs, and others are desirous of securing other employment.
