Professor Talks to Phi Sigma's on 'Genetics Since the Time of Mendel'

"Genetics Since the Time of Mendel," was the title of the lecture given by Dr. Franklin D. Keim, professor of agronomy, at the meeting of Phi Sigma, honorary biological society, held recently in Bessey Hall.

According to Keim, Mendel was the Austrian monk who first formulated the law of inheritance which formed the basis for all present work in genetics. There were other men who approximated his work but Mendel was the first to get results.

Dr. Keim said that one of the most important practical aspects of genetics is the selection of desirable strains of vegetables, fruits, and livestock, and the discarding of undesirable strains. The geneticist has found that inbreeding brings out certain recessive and dominant characters of a plant or animal. By selection he keeps only the desirable strains and discards the rest.

Showing that heredity and environment are two of the most important factors in the world, Keim brought out the fact that when one considers that his personal characteristics have all been inherited from his ancestors, and that 22 generations ago he had 2,097,152 direct ancestors, all with different characteristics, this matter of heredity becomes an exceedingly complex one. It stands to reason, he said, that the individual is a grand mixture of all the good and bad characters possessed by his multitudes of ancestors, and that the dominance of the good over the bad or the bad over the good depends essentially on the environment the individual was reared in.

Successful Man on Stage Must Be a 'Wow' Says Madison Theater Booker

Members of Klub Show Cast Say Elliott Would Please Any Audience.

A woman, reasonably beautiful, can walk across the stage followed by a spotlight, kick through a short dance routine and be acclaimed by the press as the "find" of the year, but a man must be talented to actually "wow" his audience stated the booker for the Madison Theater in Peoria, Ill.

The Kosmet show cast includes an individual who, according to many members of the cast, is sufficiently talented to satisfy any audience. This individual, Art Elliott, senior in the college of arts and science, has achieved some unusual methods of playing the harmonica; he offers one complicated selection without the aid of the hands and he plays another selection while walking across the stage on his hands.

"It all started eight years ago when one of my teachers asked for volunteers to enter the harmonica class that was being introduced into the school," explained Elliott. A contest followed the instructions and he won first place.

"Since those first few lessons there has been little tranquility in the Elliott family," confesses Art. Perpetual practice repaid him when he won the city championship two years ago. In his spare time he teaches his art to young aspirants. He and these students have played for radio audiences on various occasions.

Art plays all styles and types of music including old time, classical and popular and enjoys doing all of these though popular seems the easiest for him.

At the present time Art owns more than thirty mouth organs varying in size from three to sixteen inches. In his specialty stunts he uses a three and six inch chromatic.

part in the development of the United States as the two major political groups despite society's conception of a two-party political control.

That is the statement of Prof. J. D. Hicks, department of history, University of Wisconsin, and former dean of the arts colleges at the University of Nebraska, who spoke Friday night before a joint session of economists, sociologists, historians and political scientists attending the annual meetings of their state organizations at Iowa State college.

"The importance of third parties is not measured in victories," said Professor Hicks, "but in the success of the principles for which they stood. As soon as a third party demonstrated that a policy would draw votes, a major party would adopt that idea.

"Such significant reforms as the federal reserve system, the regulation of common carriers and corporations by the state and nation, extension of rural credits, protection of the rights of labor, fundamental changes in the money and banking systems in the latter part of the eighteenth century and other changes have resulted from pressure brought to bear by a third party."

STAFF WILL START INDIVIDUAL WRITEUPS

Information About Juniors And Seniors to Be in By Tuesday.

Individual writeups that appear with each panel in the junior and senior sections of the Cornhusker will be started next Wednesday afternoon, according to R. W. Spencer, editor. These writeups include such items as name, home town, sorority or fraternity and the various activities of the individual.

In order to enable the Cornhusker staffs to make complete and accurate writeups Spencer has asked that all juniors and seniors who did not include all of the above information on their cards when pictures were taken report at the Cornhusker office with the lacking information.

This information must be in by Tuesday at 5 p. m. so the staff members will have it in time for the writeups, he said.

"FULL-FASHION" by Maiden Form

it fits like a stocking!

The Modern BRASSIERE for the Modern Girl

Tiny "fashion-points" like those used in shaping fine silk stockings give Maiden Form's "Full-Fashion" brassiere its lovely uplift contours and at the same time make it flawlessly "skin-smooth" through the breast sections. As far as feeling and appearance go, you might be wearing no-brassiere-at-all!

But with all this effect of freedom, "Full-Fashion" is skillfully constructed to give perfect bust control and permanently blocked to keep its smart shapeliness, even through long, hard wear and frequent washings.

"Full-Fashion" is only one chapter in the fascinating tale of Maiden Form foundation garments. Send for free booklet telling the complete story—Dept. C, Maiden Form Brassiere Co., Inc. 245 Fifth Ave., N. Y.
