COLONEL OURY TALKS TO MILITARY SOCIETY

Commandant Tells Group Of Service in Army At Meeting.

Colonel Oury addressed members of Scabbard and Blade at a meeting held in Nebraska Hall, on Thursday afternoon, relating some of his experiences in the Spanish-American war.

Colonel Oury was captain of the Pershing Rifles at Nebraska U. at the outbreak of the war, and at that time endeavored to secure permission for the entire Pershing Rifles unit to be utilized in the conflict. Failing to do this, he enlisted as a private in the national guards.

Soon after arriving at training camp, Mr. Oury was made captain of B company of the Second Nebraska regiment.

After a period of training, the regiment to which he was attached entrained for San Francisco to sail for the Philippines. During the railroad journey, Colonel Oury handled the "coffee mug," seeing to it that soldiers had coffee to drink at the various stops. An accounting of all coffee used had to be made to the government, and the colonel states that it was four years before he finally settled the accounting.

The boat on which Oury left San Francisco could carry eight hundred comfortably, but twelve hundred soldiers were loaded on it, many having to sleep on the deck. Because of his position as captain, Mr. Oury was to have been one of the last to stand guard mount on the ship. However the first night out, so many were ill that he and a few other men were able to get about with the result that they stood guard mount and had the unpleasant task of cleaning the ship the next day.

After an uneventful crossing, the ships arrived in the port of Manila. Because of the shallowness there, the men had to leave the boats on improvised rafts, and when these could proceed no further, it was necessary to wade ashore, sometimes in water up to their waists. The colonel, however, hired a native to carry him ashore, saving an unnecessary ducking.

The colonel stated that there was little trouble in capturing
