Securing the Exact Opinion of Students.

IN view of a number of comments from various students, the student council committee working on the activity tax plan has altered slightly the arrangements for the vote on the plan to be held during registration week. Originally, the plan proposed for submission to the student body comprised four items, the total charge for these items to be $8 per year.

Because of objections to particular items in this plan, however, the committee has decided to give the students the option of rejecting the original plan as proposed, but voting for certain items of that plan as well as several additional items not in the original plan. For example, some students who object to purchasing a Cornhusker under the $8 plan, can vote instead for the other items, including the athletic ticket, the Daily Nebraskan, and the Awgwan, for a total of $5.35. Other combinations can be selected at the discretion of each voter.

Students will also have the opportunity of voting for a small tax to provide a convocations fund, if they so desire. The purpose of this tax and of the fund it would provide was explained in yesterday's issue of the Nebraskan. An item for the Prairie Schooner will also appear on the ballot at the request of the business manager of that publication.

FROM the results of the poll, the student council can formulate a definite plan for submission to the board of regents. Thus, for instance, if the great majority of the student body votes approval for only two or three items, instead of the entire $8 plan, the council will propose for the consideration of the regents only those items which the preponderant majority of the students approve.

The Nebraskan feels that this is a wise move on the part of the student council for securing an exact opinion of the student body. It would be unfortunate if students who favored the principle of the tax felt obliged to vote against it because they did not approve of all the items included in the blanket tax. Under the new arrangement for voting, you may choose the advantages you personally de-

Appropos The Awgwan's Coming Choices.

ONE field which the college student poll has as yet left almost entirely untouched is the selection of the most popular professor, the best dressed professor, the best teacher, etc. While college newspapers and magazines have worn out the idea of picking the paragons of coed beauty and male popularity, the poor professors struggle along in the daily routine of college work, practically unnoticed by the press and public acclaim. Why should the Awgwan pass up this rare opportunity?

The beautiful coed, elected by popular vote (or selected by arbitrary authority of some campus magazine editor), rates the rotogravure sections of metropolitan papers, and her countenance is telephotoed around the country where it appears promiscuously in newspapers of every sort.

But think of the good that would be done the student body and the university if a poll were conducted on the handsomest professor, the least dry lecturer, or something of the sort. The position of these men in an institution is relatively permanent, and the results of the poll would be available not only to the students now attending college but to all succeeding generations of students.

NO longer would the collegian beginning the process of picking and choosing his courses for the following semester, be forced to rely on the judgment of his friends as to who's the easiest professor. He would have the judgment of the whole student body (secured periodically) to guide his choice. And knowing that choice to be entirely infallible, as it is in all popularity contests, the difficulties of his decisions would be decreased a thousand fold.

Furthermore, the professors deserve some recognition. The best dressed professor would worry less about the poor salary he was paid if he had the compensatory knowledge that he was recognized by one and all as sartorially pre-eminent among his colleagues. The most popular professor, also, could bask in the reputation he had earned and the satisfaction of seeing his picture scattered broadcast through the agencies of news syndicates. No longer need he feel the inferiority complex which comes from being unnoticed. No longer need he wonder whether or not all his teaching attempts, his research and study, were worthwhile.

CERTAINLY the distribution of these recognitions in the realm of collegiate life need not be confined to male and female students. Their benefits should be extended to include faculty members.

And while we're suggesting it, we propose for the consideration of the Awgwan, in case it should adopt our plan, the selection of the professor who most consistently lets his classes out on time, the professor who, when he cracks a joke, refrains from glaring around to see if everyone is laughing, the professor who never takes roll, and then too, the professor who isn't afraid to say what he really thinks.

From such ideas comes progress in this great civilization of ours.
