Traditional Sneak Night Follows Closely on Heels of Full Week-End

THE usual comparative lull which follows on the heels of a full week end has settled on the campus. With the exception of the Panhellenic banquet at the Cornhusker last night, no functions of major importance to students are scheduled for the middle of the week. A number of fraternity and sorority freshman classes, finding things rather dull, took Monday night as the occasion for the traditional sneak night.

Marigolds adorned the tables at the informal luncheon for the mothers of the pledges at the Alpha Phi house yesterday noon. Twenty-five guests were there, and Mrs. Lulu M. Wood, Mrs. W. A. Posey, and Mrs. M. T. McShane made arrangements for the affair. Mrs. W. C. Becker, president of the mother's club, presided.

Blond Giant of Iowa State Cyclones Is Like Loaded Dynamite to Pioneers

AMES, Ia.—Smiling and good-natured as he lugs his books around the campus during the week, the blond young giant named Paul Berger doesn't look to his Iowa State college classmates like a man loaded with dynamite. But Denver university found that he was just that last Friday night. What's more, somebody touched a match to the fuse. For Paul Berger's playing at left tackle was the sharpest thorn in the Cyclone forward wall—time and again he knifed through the Pioneer line to smash Denver's offensives to bits. Some 10,000 fans, as well as officials and sports writers, got accustomed to the announcement that "Berger made the tackle."

It was Berger who caught Powers of Denver from behind on the Cyclone 12-yard line as the fast little Rocky mountain sprint champion sped toward the goal and the score that would have spelled Denver's total to 19 and victory. But the Cyclones converted Berger's brilliant play into the turning point of the game. They held for downs, got the ball and plowed down the field for the winning touchdown. "I didn't know how I could catch him, but I knew I had to do it," admitted Berger after the game. Powers has a 9.6 record in the 100-yard dash.

Berger himself is not just a flash on the sports screen. His fame as an athlete began in 1928, when he enrolled in Kirkwood high school, St. Louis, Mo. His named appeared on the all-St. Louis county football roster in 1929 and 1930, and he out-tossed all other entries in the shot-put in the state high school track meets in 1930 and 1931. His best throw was 49 feet 5 inches. Though not as large as many tackles, Berger makes up for lack of weight with his ruggedness, alertness and unlimited scrappiness. He charges fast and low on offense, and when on the defensive is the kind of tackle that slashes through to nab the ball later behind the line. Berger is enrolled in industrial science at Iowa State, and will graduate in 1935. He will be eligible for football next fall.

STUDIO SOUBS

BY GALE ROCKWELL. NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Tin Pan Alley, along with big business, has gone' code. And that's no pun either!

The song and rhythm chiefs—who officially call themselves the "Music Publishers' Protective association"—have signed an NRA agreement which, among other things, makes it a high crime for any music house to list well-known personalities as co-authors of numbers which actually are written in their entirety by composers whose names are not so well known.

Now if NRA's General Johnson will please blanket-code these radio crooners who insist on holding a quasi-false note at the end of a number so long they could be accused of hoarding everything will be swell. They should be put on a maximum 40-second per bleat basis!

While we're on the subject of singing (alleged and otherwise), here's a pleasant thought: Claudette Colbert, whose recent appendectomy temporarily interfered with her work in the new C. B. DeMille effort, "Four Frightened People," is showing us a thing or two about local art. She studied in New York under Walter Kieseewetter, famous voice coach, and proves how much she learned in "The Torch Singer."

*Note: Patriotic boost for dictionary manufacturers... You're welcome, Mr. Webster. Always glad to do our part for dear old NRA.

And is the big Blue Eagle dropping tail feathers on Broadway? Twenty big shows are scheduled to open practically at once. They include a return of the Ziegfeld Follies and a George Gershwin musical called "Let Them Eat Cake," which is a sequel to "Of Thee I Sing."

Then Irving Berlin and Moss Hart will do "As Thousands Cheer" for the Music Box. This is the first musical Berlin has written for the Music Box since the days of the old Music Box Revues. The show promises the best ever—even Irving himself admits it.

"My masterpiece," says he, Marilyn Miller, Clifton Webb and Ethel Waters of "Stormy Weather" fame will be in the cast. Hey-hey! Looks like the goode olde days are a-comin' back!

But times are not so good out in Hollywood. This NRA thing has the movie producers groggy. They're about ready to say—almost out loud—"Okay, Mr. Government. Have it your own way. Run the business to suit yourself. But if it's O. K. by the code, can we run errands?"

In a way you can't blame the producers for being cynical—more cynical than sore, underneath. The spectacle of one of the most highly paid groups in the world, taken collectively, walking out on strike and then proceeding to fight among themselves about whose strike it is does something to one's sense of humor.

Which is not saying there were not a lot of meritorious arguments and mitigating complications on all three sides, but so much talk is cheap, any way you look at it. Government control may be the salvation of the movie industry, many believe—if salvation it wants. Meanwhile, look for a Hollywood "brain trust" that would give the professor fellows a real whack at something they've been taking pot shots at for years. And they might not do so bad at that.

Rampant ravings: Times Square and 42nd st. And the Great White Way that runs kitty-wampus across the town: I have crossed it a thousand times and never once have I had the slightest difficulty despite all you've read about it's being the busiest corner in the world... Radio City Music hall, the calamity howlers notwithstanding, remains the greatest project in theatrical fields. Roxy's stage presentations are unequalled and the majesty and grandeur of the Music Hall has never been surpassed... Just a year ago Jesse Lasky told a dinner group of close friends he was penniless, but he promised a rapid comeback. He's doing it at Fox, and it looks good... The Duncan Sisters may be on big-time radio soon with a new hilarious Topsy and Eva series. Filmland Footnotes.

LeRoy Prinz, one-time big-time show stager on Broadway and now dance director at Paramount, has emerged as the great defender of Hollywood womanhood. He won't stand for any monkey-business with the girls who work for him. A fellow outside the studio gate tried to get fresh recently with some of the chorines from "Too Much Harmony," new Bing Crosby heart-break, and LeRoy socked him so far he's now trying to learn Chinese. A rude technician got similar treatment.

Our best Hollywood informant, Jimmy Jerry (Yes, really! And the girls out there call him "cute.") says that blondes, for the moment, are on the wane in the sound and sequence capital, where there's a renaissance of the red-heads. The henna-haired girls were right up in front during Clara Bow's hey-day, and now that it's been discovered they photograph so well in party scenes where clothes combinations count they're doing a comeback.

The pre-marital divorce (broken engagement to you) of Lila Lee and George Hill, the director, was done so nicely everyone takes it for granted they will remain the best of friends. Which is correct. Filmland's whisper leading plati- from blonde likes a cameraman. That's all right. We could never see anything especially wrong with cameramen.

"With women in it, Texas A. and M. would become merely another college," he declared. "It would lose a certain distinctiveness which now marks it."

Interviews With . . . Ghosts . . .

by Maurice Johnson

This is one of a series of imaginary dialogues concerning the ideal university life. The dialogues will appear at regular bi-weekly intervals.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN nodded when I asked him if he had ideas about a university. "In fact," he said, "in my former existence it pleased me to establish an academy in Philadelphia. And, indeed, a number of its students became famous ornaments to their country."

"But what was it like?" I asked. "What do you think a university should teach?" "I think," said Franklin, "that I would have my students learn to turn from slothfulness as though it were Death itself. There will be sleeping enough in the grave."

"Yes," I said. "God gives all things to industry," he continued. "And industry makes all things easy. I think I would let that thought run thru all my students' lessons like a refrain."

"And what subjects would you teach?" I asked. "Many," Franklin answered. "To be versatile is to have other hands to use when one is struck off. Let the student know grammar and mathematics and philosophy. Let him be versed in the sciences. But forbid him to stand idle with his knowledge weighing down his pockets. He should put it to good and practical use, and he should use it efficiently."

"That is very sound," I said. "But what would you have him do in his leisure time?" "Leisure," he said, "is time for doing something useful. The wise man makes his leisure time his servant, but to the unwise it is master."

"Expensive follies," he said, "can make leisure pleasant for the moment, but—Women and wine, game and deceit. Make the wealth small and the wants great. 'That is well put,' I told him. 'But there is another sort of university, too,' he said. 'What is that, Mr. Franklin?' I asked.

"It is the school of experience," he said. "And tho it is a dear school it is the school of many. For fools will have no learning in any other."

COLUMBUS, O. Oct. 10. (C. N. S.) Prof. Matthew Brown Hammond, nationally known economist of Ohio State university, was being mourned this week following his death which was caused by a heart ailment.
