New Armory Which May Be Elected Would Displace Nebraska Hall, Now Tottering Under Burden of Old Age

Old Nebraska hall, along with University hall, slowly crumbling to the ground as a result of years of use, and nearly fifty years of exposure to the elements, added another impetus toward its complete abandonment when it was learned yesterday that university authorities petitioned the federal public works committee for funds to build a new armory.

Originally constructed in 1888 as a science and mathematics hall, it too, like U hall was decapitated when the roof started to leak.

Since then, the building has developed several new hazards. Large cracks have appeared along the front, while the sides show a tendency to sag.

The second building constructed on the campus, Nebraska hall, was built at the beginning of a new period of prosperity on the campus, faculty and students alike believing this to be the beginning of a larger campus.

A number of famous personalities have passed through its halls, including General John J. Pershing, Secretary of War Dern, and others.
