BURNETT DENIES GRANTING SPECIAL ROTC PRIVILEGES

Statement Was Made That Chancellor Had Granted Methodist Exemption.

"It is not the purpose of the University of Nebraska to give special privileges in the matter of fulfilling their military science requirements to students affiliated with any specific church," explained Chancellor E. A. Burnett Saturday.

The chancellor had previously been quoted to the effect that all Methodist men students, who compose about one-third of the university men, would be automatically excused from drill on grounds of religious scruples.

"There has been no change in the policy that has been in effect for many years," he explained. He pointed out that under regents rules each undergraduate man in the University of Nebraska is required to receive military instruction during four semesters and that excusing from this requirement is granted only on the ground of conscientious scruples, physical disability, or other reasons equally valid.

Membership in a particular church, as such, is not a justifiable excuse, he pointed out, but rather the beliefs of the individual must be taken into consideration.

Army would provide room. A new armory, if erected, would have no effect on the existing military instruction except to provide better quarters.

Chancellor Burnett pointed out that the thirty-six men who have been excused from military training during the past three and one-half years on the grounds of conscientious scruples represented nine different church denominations.

Students who desire to be excused from military training should apply to the director of military training.
