Traditional 'Hello Day' Fails on University of Washington Campus

If you think "Hello Day" on this university campus is an utter failure; if you were disgusted with the chilly reception you got as you cheerily greeted someone with an "hello" perhaps you will find comfort in the fact that at least on one other campus, the University of Washington, the results of "Hello Day" were just as bad if not worse. Following is a story written by a student at Washington which appeared in the school publication.

Yesterday I went "helling" about the campus. You know, just getting in trim for today's "Hello Day." Well, I still think the idea is swell, but here's what happened to me:

A brunette with a green scarf was the object of my first attempt. Stepping up even with her, I said, "Hello." The stimulus brought forth no reaction. Matching a couple of strides with her, I said another "Hello." Still no Stimulus-Response. Hoping that I might condition her, I "helled" for the third time. Raising her left shoulder just a trifle—I was on that side—she said, "I don't believe I've met you." I buttoned my overcoat just a trifle tighter about me and went on.

Perhaps the disappointment had weakened my voice, but anyway the trio of coeds I next accosted didn't hear me. "I'll get 'em coming out of their eight o'clock in Denny," I said to myself. Four hundred students poured out of the venerable structure at

ARMAMENT RACE FEARED

Professor Harold W. Stoke, of the political science department, in an address before a Sunday evening Union meeting at the Second Presbyterian church, warned his audience that the growing spirit of nationalism, if it be like the old, cannot help but lead to destruction by war. He was the third speaker at a series of such meetings conducted by the east Lincoln churches for discussions of the subject "Facing the International Situation Realistically."

"The fact that the national governments all over the world are playing such an important part in the lives of the citizens," Prof. Stoke said, "is responsible in a large part to the growing tide of nationalism." He pointed out that the state has become not only a political organization, but is becoming more and more the basis for economic life and even a part in business. An aerial view of the state capitol tower is one of the scenes in the exhibit which received a great deal of attention. The study was taken by John Edwards, state capitol guide, for a newspaper and has been used in several rotogravure sections.

Dr. H. W. Orr exhibited several pictures among the views of Memorials to Joan of Arc and a celebration in her honor, the Campanile or Leaning Tower of Pisa and gargoyles, towers and roofs of Milan, Italy.

of the eye highly magnified which is exhibited by Dr. Edwin Katske.

Like the tenuous strands of a spider's web, bridge cables seem to begin at a common point near the eye and radiate outward in the distance, in the study of "Cables" by F. Dwight Kirsch, of the Fine Arts department. In the picture cables lose their utilitarian aspect and become a thing of symmetric beauty.

Shadow Studies Included. Among the pictures exhibited by Miss Kady Faulkner of the Fine Arts department is a study called "Shadows," which shows several objects in a room thrown into partial relief by a ray of strong sunlight streaming through a window. The ridges of a freshly plowed field are shown in another of her photos.

A passage way of purple shadow beckoning the curious explorer is depicted in a scene called "Corridor" exhibited by Claude Fliger.

Several prominent enlargements are exhibited by Dr. Miles Greener. These have a subdued tone leaving the impression of scenes viewed in the final dusk preceding darkness and are made by a process little attempted by other exhibitors.
