Getting Set For Four Years.

A majority of the freshman student body that enters the university at the opening of each year is bewildered, and a good percentage of that group is still at a loss three years later. In these days of little opportunity and economic distress it is difficult to decide on a certain field of study, and to concentrate on that line for four years.

It is the duty of the university administration and teaching staff to acquaint each newcomer with the campus, the university and its purposes, the various divisions of the institution, and to let him know what is expected of him during his attendance at the school.

The largest college on this campus, and on most others, is the Arts and Sciences college. Most of the freshmen who enter that division are there because they don't know exactly what to do.

For Arts and Sciences freshmen there is a course termed Freshman Lecture, designed to acquaint students in that college with the numerous departments of the university, and in that way to help them locate themselves in a field to which they are well adapted.

It is the purpose of the Arts and Sciences college to offer each student a full and cultural education as well as to place him in some specialized field. With the world demanding more and more insistently the man of broad knowledge with a full personality in addition to a knowledge of facts, the Arts and Sciences college fills an important niche in educational halls.

Freshman students should by this time be fairly well adjusted to their new mode of living, and should also have established study habits. Many seniors, however, are still attempting to force themselves to study. Educators as well as students are confused as to just how to turn out the finished and well-rounded man and woman from this university.

In every senior class graduated at commencement exercises in the coliseum there are examples of various types—the grind, the athlete, the social hound, the activities man, and all too few students worthy of the name. The true student manages to develop some vision and sense of proportions in combining the various elements of college life as they should be combined.

The grind has grades galore, but in compiling them he has lost some precious elements that awaited him when he entered college. He has a warped or deficient personality, has a mind stuffed with knowledge that he has failed to associate with outside life and common sense.

There is no need of reviewing each of these types. The facts are apparent and very well demonstrated in individuals on all parts and in all departments of the campus.

It is to be hoped that as many members of this year's freshman class as possible will be graduated as real students three and a half years from now. Every facility for advancement and guidance of each new student is being used by the teaching staff of the university.

In cooperating with his instructors and advisors each student should think seriously about his special abilities and try to determine what is the field to which he is especially well adapted. Making a choice is difficult, but the student must choose.

While each undergraduate is attempting to find himself there is an undercurrent of controversy and disagreement pervading the campus, the ever-present argument between vocationalists, ranting and otherwise, and the supporters of the broad and cultural education.

Keep Young And Healthy.

With the advent of the first cold weather in an unusually mild and pleasant autumn season university students are being forced to spend a bit more of their time indoors than at any previous time this fall. From now until the opening of the spring cheeks made rosy by plenty of fresh air will become pale, some of us will get sluggish, and our studies will suffer.

The importance of regular exercise and a bountiful supply of fresh air in the life of a person can't be over-emphasized. College work demands a wealth of energy, alertness, and what might be called pick-up. During the winter season such traits are noticeably lacking among undergraduates, and for that matter, faculty members.

To be lazy is the easiest thing in the world, and the refusal to keep oneself physically fit is an expression of laziness in its most foolish form.

It wouldn't be a bad idea for every student to allot himself a certain amount of time each day for a brisk walk, calisthenics, swimming, hand-ball, basketball, or some other form of exercise so that he can be capable, alert, and efficient.

In the coliseum and stadium this school offers men students full opportunity for exercise and good conditioning. Additional lockers have been installed in the coliseum this fall to take care of an increase in the number of men using the plant. There are the facilities, and it is every young man's duty to keep himself physically fit.

Faculty members are in a position to appreciate good condition in the student body. It is difficult to lecture to a bunch of sleeping invalids.

During examination week each semester many professors advise members of their classes to set aside an hour a day for exercise. It is a demonstrated fact that if a student exercises for an hour and follows that with an hour of concentrated study, he will get more done than if he attempts to study for a two hour period.

make it necessary for them to fight a hard and selfish battle. It's not impossible to develop a sound and worthwhile philosophy of life in today's colleges; many students are doing it. The exceptional person can work out his pattern from the crazy quilt of ideas with which he is confronted; too many, however, know not that there is any common thread to be found, are lost in the confusion of finding it, are indifferent about it all.—The Michigan Daily.

Ending With A Kiss.

In the metropolitan papers of some few weeks back, there appeared a news item startling in its revelation of the corruption and dark-dealing that go on in our prominent secondary schools in an effort to produce winning football teams.

It seems that the Loomis eleven was about to meet a highly touted bunch of toughs from up Deerfield way, and the team, coaching staff, and student body were trembling, collectively and individually at the thought of the impending shellacking. But sweet are the uses of adversity, and some clever alumnus, or someone else in power turned on the heat, and Miss Bette Davis, of Hollywood fame, rose magnificently to the occasion.

And after reading this editorial 80 per cent of the students will be reminded that a particularly good movie is being shown this afternoon. —Daily Illini.

Thursday Ends Touch Football Competition

All touch football games must be finished by Thursday night. The finals and consolation games will be played at 4:15 on the touch football fields. Barb games are to be played as scheduled. Since the weather is likely to remain inclement for some time it is necessary that the games be played immediately.

Student! Beware Of Culture.

This afternoon, Dean Rexford Newcomb, of the College of Fine Arts, will open the first of a new series of lectures on "The Direction of the Arts Today," in the hall of casts, Architecture building. This afternoon, judging from the average procedure, 60 per cent of the students will hurriedly eat their Sunday noon dinner so that they can reach the theater before 2:30 o'clock and see a movie at the minimum cost of 25 cents.

Such a type of relaxation and recreation will probably be of great benefit to students who have been attending five or six days of classes. However, to the student who is financially embarrassed the art lectures might not be as foreboding as it might appear.

To most students, art is something that wealthy individuals pay a tremendous amount of money to have in their homes. It is usually thought of as something lofty, inspiring, and cultivating, but never interesting. For this reason the average student leaves the subject of art out of his scope of intellectual and healthy studies. No man's education, however, is complete without some ability, some appreciation of art as it appears in everyday life. And since most students on this campus are possessed with the idea of getting all they can out of the university without returning anything, the art lectures should have some appeal to them for this sole reason.

Students, in general, have an overpowering fear that they might accidentally learn something of matters that are not directly in their field of specialization. Because they wish to avoid this particular type of contamination they shun subjects of general cultural value such as art, if they are not majoring in this subject.

The show, is scheduled to get underway at 9 a. m. Doors will open, however, at 8 a. m., and block reservations for seats will be held until 8:45. Block reservations, for thirty or more seats, can be made with Henry Kosman, business manager for the Kosmet Klub.

They are talking about the professor of English at the University of Illinois who forgot his text book. He sent one of the students in the office after it, forgot he sent him out, and marked him absent.

Yesterday afternoon Carl Frederic Steckelberg, professor of violin from the school of music, presented the seventh musical convocation at the Temple Theater, accompanied by Mrs. Steckelberg, pianist. Brahms' "Piano and Violin Sonata, Op. 100" in three movements, "Allegro vivace," "Andante tranquillo (Vivace)," and "Allegretto grazioso" opened the program. An illustration of tone types on the violin with selected compositions, concluded the concert.

The Junior Players presented "Macbeth" before Senior University Players at the Temple yesterday morning. Cast members who dramatized the celebrated Shakespearean tragedy were Roy Squire as King Duncan; Era Lown as MacDuff; Dixie Betzier as Lady MacDuff; Melvin Fielder as Macbeth; Portia Boynton as Lady Macbeth; Margaret Straub as their child; Margaret (Molly) Carpenter as Banquo; Jane Edwards as the attendant; Irene Barry and Florence Smeerin as the "witches"; and Elsa Swift as the wounded sergeant.

Before the performance last night of "Wednesday's Child," Marion Yule, mother of two of the young actors who are in the boys' scene, told Jimmy and Norman Yule that they needn't wait after their part had been played. Jimmy piped up and said, "But we have to wait until afterwards to receive congratulations and for the reception," meaning to help eat the ice cream. It seems that Jimmy is one of the star consumers of the ice cream back stage after it is removed from the stage.

Lillian Helms Polly, assisted by her students, Edna Mitchell, Ruth Johnson, William Gant, and William Ferguson, presented a program before the Altrusa club Wednesday evening at the University Club. Mrs. Polly also presented a Purcell hour for her radio program yesterday, the occasion being the anniversary of Henry Purcell, 1695. Lois and Frances Vaughn, Mary Margaret Maly, Dorothy Carlson, Jane Edwards, Edna Mitchell, Ruth Johnson, John Stone, and William Gant appeared on the program. Recent visitors at Mr. and Mrs. Polly's home were Neil and Dean Dearinger.

If any of you are in Omaha during the Thanksgiving holidays, you should attend some of the performances of the San Carlos Opera Company. It is rarely that a company of singers of the first rank tour opera. On Wednesday evening, Nov. 28, "Carmen" will be sung. "Il Pagliacci" and "Caverliera Rusticana" will both be sung on a double bill Thursday evening, Nov. 29. Friday evening, Nov. 30, "Rigoletto" is scheduled, and Saturday, Dec. 1, "Martha" will be sung at a matinee performance and that evening "Aida" will close the engagement of the company in their Omaha season. Under the guidance of the famed impresario, Fortune Gallo, the company of 150 members has won the praises of musicians the country over. Costumes and scenery are elaborate; there is a large ballet corps; and the operas will be sung in English, Italian, and French. Last year this same company was held over at both San Francisco and Los Angeles for several weeks after their month engagements had closed.
